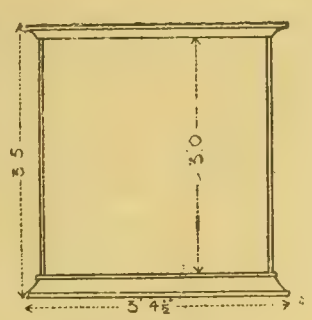
CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR

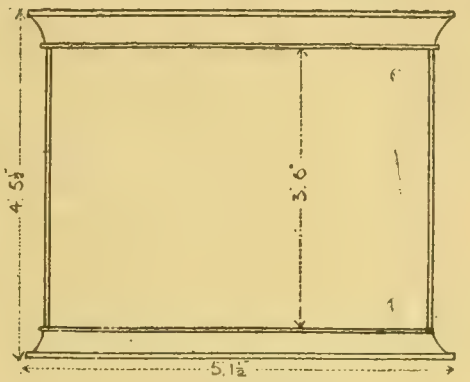
AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries:

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTOWN, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.



The Chivers' Indicator, 4,000 numbers.



The other Indicator, 4,000 numbers.

LEIGH.
LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
OLDHAM E. C. S. L.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH LIT. INST.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S.W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are:

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdues automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.
8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

CEDRIC CHIVERS, PORTWAY, BATH, ENGLAND.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

November 9, 1900.

The titanic figure of Napoleon continues to haunt the imagination alike of men of thought and men of action. And like the Sphinx it grows ever the more mysteriously fascinating the more it is pondered and studied. The latest to feel the spell, or, more correctly, the latest to confess its potency, is Lord Rosebery, whose book 'Napoleon: the Last Phase' has been published by Mr. A. L. Humphreys. Lord Rosebery has, so to speak, had Napoleon long on his mind; and the present work may therefore be taken as the ripe and well-considered opinion of a living statesman on one of the most extraordinary personalities of all history. The book, as the title indicates, is not a biography: it is rather a study of the Emperor in exile, and as a character sketch must be accorded high praise. Those who have read Lord Rosebery's 'Pitt' know that he wields a facile and fluent pen, that he has a gift for epigram, and in style has that air of ease and good breeding which seems to belong inalienably to the cultured man of the world. The work on Pitt exceeds in brilliancy this work on Napoleon; but in maturity, depth, soundness of judgment, and felicity of characterisation the latter seems to us far to surpass the former.

Lord Rosebery bases his study of Napoleon in his last phase at St. Helena chiefly on the private diary of Gourgaud, who observed closely and wrote copiously for his own eye alone. 'It embodies,' we are told, 'the truth as it appeared to the writer from day to day. It throws a strange light on the author, but a still newer light on his master. But when we have read it we feel a doubt of all other records and a conviction that this book is more nearly the unvarnished truth' than anything else that has been put forth. It is added that the Longwood publications 'increase in veracity in proportion to the remoteness of their appearance from the events they chronicle. Thus Gourgaud, who is published in 1898, is more truthful than Montholon, who publishes in 1847; and Montholon, again, is more truthful than Las Cases, who publishes in 1823. Least of all, perhaps, to be depended on is O'Meara, who published in 1822.' Lord Rosebery discusses the literature of his subject at considerable length, and the passage we have quoted gives his judgment regarding most of it. Of Gourgaud he gives a long and interesting account, interspersed with many of the racy and characteristic sayings of Napoleon. The affectionate and loyal Gourgaud was the cause of much annoyance. 'He loves me as a lover loves his mistress,' said his master; 'he was impossible.' But his diary, though full of the rage and jealousy of a weak nature, contains the truth as he saw it; and to him we primarily owe the capital portrait of the dethroned Emperor which Lord Rosebery presents to the world. The good Gourgaud rendered a service which is at last appreciated after a lapse of fourscore years.

In a brief but pregnant chapter describing the deportation Lord Rosebery expresses regret that the British Government undertook the custody of Napoleon, and still more regret 'that the duty should have been discharged in a spirit so ignoble and through agents so unfortunate.' One remembers Carlyle's remark about the brawling of Sir Hudson Lowe, a well-meaning mediocrity placed in a position for which he was not fit. Lord Rosebery calls him 'tactless to a degree almost incredible.' He is, indeed, one of the men, victims of circumstance, who become everlastingly notorious through incapacity, and serve as butts for the gibes of posterity. Of his bickerings with and about Napoleon Lord Rosebery gives a vivid account; he also deals in an authoritative manner with the questions of title and of money, making in connection with the latter some severe comments on the conduct of Lowe and his official chief, Lord Bathurst. But perhaps the best, certainly the most interesting, chapter in the book is that devoted to the conversations of Napoleon. In these we have the man as he was in all his greatness and all his pettiness. He loved books and was fond of discussing authors. He gave Macpherson's 'Ossian' a vogue on the Continent, and carried with him into exile the hundred volumes of Voltaire. He also attempted to learn English, and the attempt was almost as successful as his efforts to beat the British at Waterloo. Lord Rosebery gives an amusing specimen of his skill, which we regret we have not space to quote. In talk he was often singularly free, and as often bitingly caustic; but he could be tender also, and to the last he had the virtue of remembering his friends. Of the end Lord Rosebery gives a description which must rank high as a piece of English prose, though it is not of the style the reader first thinks. Here is the final verdict on the amazing genius which conquered and lost Europe: 'He raised himself by the use and ruined himself by the abuse of superhuman faculties. He was wrecked by the extravagance of his own genius. No less powers than those which had effected his rise could have achieved his fall.' The book is one to read and treasure.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The syndics of the Cambridge University Press have entrusted Mr. H. St. J. Thackeray, late Scholar of King's College, and translator of Blass's Grammar of New Testament Greek, with the preparation of a Grammar of the Greek of the Old Testament; and Mr. J. H. A. Hart, Scholar of St. John's College, will edit for the same body the Greek text of Ecclesiasticus after the Vatican MS. Gr. 346 (Holmes and Parsons, 248).

An important illustrated work, in two volumes, on Armenia, by Mr. H. F. B. Lynch, will shortly be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. The book will be entitled 'Armenia: Travels and Studies,' and will consist principally of a record of Mr. Lynch's extensive travels in this little-known country during recent years, and of an attempt to enlarge our knowledge of the geography and physical features. At the same time, it deals closely with the condition of the population, and with those problems of an economic and political nature which are likely in the future to occupy the attention of Europe to a degree even greater than in the past.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will shortly publish a history of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, by Captain Guggisberg. The volume will be illustrated with various photographs and coloured plates.

The Authors' Society is getting on. The Pension Fund, as we learn from the last number of the Author, already amounts to £1,600, and that amount has been invested in the names of Mr. E. Clodd, Mr. J. M. Lely, and Mr. D. Freshfield as trustees.

The Babylonian royal letters which the authorities of the British Museum obtained from Babylonia some years ago have been copied by Mr. Leonard W. King, the Assistant in the Oriental Department, and Messrs. Luzac will publish the text and translation in their Semitic Series. These letters throw considerable light upon the civilisation and system of government in vogue some four thousand years ago.

Mr. Arnold-Forster, M.P., who has been appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, is a director of Messrs. Cassell & Co. He is the author of a number of books, including 'How to Solve the Irish Question,' 'In a Conning Tower,' and 'The Coming of the Kilogram.'

'The Handy Man Afloat and Ashore' is the title of a book which Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week, by the Rev. G. Goodenough, R.N. The pictures are numerous, and comprise many varied subjects, from a torpedo explosion to a gun on Captain Scott's carriage. The book is well garnished with jovial yarns and has a collection of Naval Songs.

The Rev. George Arbuthnot, Vicar of Stratford-on-Avon, has decided to publish the 'Shakespeare Sermons' preached in the Collegiate Church of that town on the Sundays following the poet's birthday, 1894-1900, and the volume will be issued very shortly by Messrs. Longmans & Co. Among the various preachers on these occasions were the Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, the Very Rev. C. W. Stubbs, the Rev. G. F. Browne (now Lord Bishop of Bristol), the Rev. Alfred Ainger, the Rev. A. Nicholson, the Rev. R. S. De C. Laffan, and the Rev. George Arbuthnot.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce a work entitled 'Secret Memoirs of William II. and Francis Joseph.' The book, which is written under the nom de plume of Madame la Marquise de Fontenoy, is understood to be the work of a Continental lady of high rank who was married some time ago to a well-known Englishman.

So far as sales go, the honours of the season are decidedly with the ladies. Miss Corelli's book 'The Master-Christian' has broken all records, and Mrs. Ward's 'Eleanor' is proving a brilliant second. Indeed, the latter is going with almost as great a rush as the first, and in America is so far 'the book of the season,' close on 60,000 copies having been sold before publication. It should be added that 'Eleanor' has been exceedingly well received by the reviewers, and is likely, if the start be any indication, to run 'Robert Elsmere' close in point of popularity.

The Academy, which is sometimes delightfully novel and original in its information about books and publishers, includes in its last issue 'Red Pottage' among the novels 'published in 1900 up to last Saturday.'

The serious reviews are this month mostly given over to politics and war; but the Nineteenth Century contains at least one literary article of rare beauty and interest, we mean that on 'The Gael and his Heritage,' by Miss Fiona MacLeod. Miss MacLeod knows the Gael of the remote Highlands and Islands as no other living writer knows him, and her style has all the charm and magic which Arnold found in the best Celtic writers. The present article, which purports to be a review of 'Carmina Gadelica,' by Mr. Alex. Carmichael, is really an essay on the Celtic spirit in song and legend, and a protest against the inimical influence of Calvinism upon the literature of the Gael in Scotland. It is beautifully and suggestively written. Another article of some literary interest is that by Dr. Jessopp on 'The Lake Dwellers,' otherwise the Lake Poets: but it is loosely written, and is hardly more than a running gossip. A paper on 'Buddhism and Christianity,' by the late Professor Max Müller, is also given. The department headed 'The Newspapers,' by Sir Wemyss Reid, is a little difficult to understand. Have we not the newspaper sufficiently with us without having it dragged into the monthly reviews?

The recent decree by the French Minister of Public Instruction respecting the simplification of French Syntax appears both in its original form in French, and also with a translation by Mr. James Boëelle, B.A., Officier d'Académie, Examiner in the University of London, in Part 6 of the new edition of 'Cassell's Popular Educator.' The concessions made in this document will be recognised in the examination on Commercial Education now being conducted in connection with the 'Popular Educator.'

The first edition of Mr. Arnold-Forster's book, 'The War Office, the Army, and the Empire,' published this week by Messrs. Cassell & Co., has been already exhausted. A reprint will be ready immediately.

It is now announced that the sketch of the late Lord Chief Justice Russell for the 'Dictionary of National Biography' will be written by Mr. Justice Mathew, not by Mr. A. Birrell, as was first stated.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus promise a sixpenny edition of R. L. Stevenson's delightful 'New Arabian Nights.'

Mr. J. A. Cramb, Professor of Modern History in Queen's College, London, has long been engaged on a work upon 'The Origins of Imperial Britain.' The present grave crisis has induced him to publish, through Messrs. Macmillan & Co., the more theoretical section of his still uncompleted work, under the title of 'Reflections on the Origin and Destiny of Imperial Britain.' The seven lectures deal first with the abstract questions—what is Imperialism? how has the political ideal, how has the religious ideal, developed? Next comes a discussion on some aspects of the war in South Africa—cosmopolitanism, jingoism, militarism; then war is treated on general grounds with special reference to the teaching of prophets, working from Tolstoi and Carlyle back to Christ. Finally the vicissitudes of States and Empires are reviewed, in relation to the Cyclic theory, and the Destiny of Imperial Britain compared with the Destiny of Man.

According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Mail, the Russians on occupying Moukden, the capital of Manchuria, secured a large quantity of very valuable Oriental MSS., which, by command of the Russian Government, are being sent to St. Petersburg in order to be submitted to a minute examination at the hands of the authorities of the Imperial Library. Among these MSS. there should be, according to the view of Russian experts, many MSS. of Greek and Russian classics, which were plundered and carried away by the Mongols in their wars of devastation in Europe in the thirteenth century.

'The Biograph in War' is the title of a book which Mr. Fisher Unwin will shortly publish. The author, Mr. Kennedy Laurie Dickson, carried the biograph through ten months of campaigning, during which time he took upwards of eighty thousand pictures. He also kept a diary of his observations and experiences, from which much of the letterpress of the volume is made up.

Mr. Frank Harris has a new volume of stories nearly ready. Entitled 'Montes the Matador,' it contains a tale of that name and four others: 'First Love: a Mere Episode'; 'Profit and Loss'; 'Sonia'; and 'I was an Interpreter once: a Mere Episode.' Mr. Grant Richards will publish the book on November 15.

Mr. Adrian Hofmeyr's 'Story of my Captivity during the Transvaal War' is published this week by Mr. Edward Arnold. Since his release Mr. Hofmeyr has been lecturing in different parts of the country on South African affairs, and he is just about to return to the Cape to take up the appointment of Assistant to Lord Edward Cecil, Imperial Commissioner of the Western Transvaal.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. have in the press a volume of 'Occasional Essays on Native South Indian Life,' by Stanley P. Rice, of the Indian Civil Service.

Mr. Henry W. Keay, the well-known bookseller, has been elected Mayor of Eastbourne for the third year in succession.

The Duke of York, Lord Salisbury, and Mr. Chamberlain have recently accepted copies of Mr. Ferrar Fenton's new translation of the New Testament, published by Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son. Mr. Ferrar Fenton is a direct descendant of Roger Fenton, who assisted at the making of the Authorised Version of the Bible, and also of Bishop Ferrar.

To Messrs. Macmillan's series of 'Elementary Classics' has been added an edition of the lives of Miltiades and Epaminondas from Cornelius Nepos, prepared by Rev. G. H. Nall, Assistant Master at Westminster School.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons will publish next week a novel from the pen of Curtis Yorke, entitled 'Carpathia Knox.'

'The Ruby Fairy Book' is the title of Messrs. Hutchinson's new Christmas volume of fairy tales. There are many illustrations by Mr. W. H. Millar, and the stories are contributed by well-known writers.

The increasing interest taken in the study of astronomy has induced the proprietors of Knowledge to issue an annual for students and workers in that science. It is entitled 'Knowledge Diary and Scientific Handbook, 1901,' and will contain, among other things, useful tables, original articles, calendar of scientific events, and a blank diary portion.

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. have in preparation a new novel entitled 'The Minor Canon,' by G. Beresford Fitzgerald. The novel deals with the history of a London clergyman who rises to great eminence in the Church, but is haunted by the sin of his youth.

The Cambridge University Press are publishing a translation by Professor Maitland from the German of Dr. Otto Gierke's work on 'Political Theories of the Middle Age.'

Mr. Fisher Unwin is issuing a sixpenny edition of Mrs. Alexander's popular novel, 'Brown, V.C.'

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons announce for early publication 'Troddles and Us and Others,' a sequel to R. Andom's humorous story, 'We Three and Troddles,' which originally appeared in 1894.

AN INTERESTING EXHIBIT.

There is now on view at the depôt of the Guild of Women-Binders, 61 Charing Cross Road, a remarkable Altar Book on vellum, of which the following is a description:—

This book, written and illuminated on sixty folio pages of vellum, contains the Office of the Holy Eucharist (with the Collects) according to the use of the English Church.

The style of the decoration is based on examples of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

There are two full-page illuminations, one—the frontispiece—representing the Institution of the Holy Eucharist, and the other—facing the Canon—containing six scenes of Our Lord's Passion, grouped round a large central crucifixion. A number of other pages contain marginal illuminations, and about fifty initial letters enclose figures and subjects appropriate to the text, while all other capital letters are decorated in degrees corresponding to their importance.

The text, while of a distinctly Gothic character, is perfectly readable.

The liturgical music is inserted in the usual square-note notation.

The magnitude of the work will be realised when it is stated that it is computed that sixty hours per page (on an average) were spent upon it, exclusive of the time occupied in designing the ornament and other preliminary arrangement.

The volume is especially suitable for presentation for use in a cathedral, but, its value being £500, it can appeal to the wealthy only. It is beyond question one of the most superb examples in existence of the art of illuminating in modern times.

THE PRICE OF BOOKS IN FRANCE.

Referring to the increased prices of French books, mentioned in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, November 3, Le Temps says: 'Sometimes the booksellers complain that they don't gain enough; sometimes the publishers allege the high price of paper; but as for that good creature the public, it pays, accepting dearer books like dearer meat or coal with a lamb-like resignation.

'Among the causes which combine to explain the so-called "book crisis," there is one which neither booksellers nor publishers willingly mention. I cannot remember,' says the writer, 'hearing them ask if most of the volumes they publish or sell are really worth buying? This question, however, is not uninteresting. "The market," as we must so call it, is inundated with book products below mediocrity, and yet astonishment is expressed at finding some opposition in a portion of the public which is capable of forming a judgment, or which makes inquiry before untying its purse strings. Or perhaps it is forgotten that there are limits to appetite, and that the most gluttonous reader in the world cannot devour—not to say buy—the enormous quantity of silly novels published in the course of the year. They wrong one another.

'The author in quest of a publisher and unable to get his writings printed seems to us a fabulous personage. Nowadays everything is printed, and that is doubtless why it is that not all books are sold. We do not mean to say that a serious work is printed rashly. But the least bit of a novel, the most trivial collection of stories, easily find a publisher. What do I say? They even find purchasers in greater or less number; anyhow, they are bought. And that is the astonishing part of the business. Instead of feeling surprise at the sight of some piles of books remaining almost untouched, the bookseller ought to be astonished at seeing some others melt away from the shop-window. But he hardly feels astonished at that.

'I am not blind to the weak side of my task. It may be objected that the class of readers capable of forming a judgment are relatively few compared with those who buy without any discrimination. But, restricted as the former may be, it nevertheless exists and it counts. There are still in France some thousands of well-informed men and men of taste. Do them the honour of thinking that their abstention from book-buying goes for something, not in the book crisis, but in the bad book crisis.

'For, after all, we do not hear that useful or well-written or interesting books are not sold. It may happen occasionally that a work of merit does not at once achieve the success it deserves; but more frequently such works do succeed. It is the others which in the opinion of those interested do not succeed enough, and, in the opinion of competent judges, succeed only too much.

'However, the evil is without an immediate remedy. The more people there are who read, the more books we may naturally expect to be printed; and the more printed the more chance that indifferent or bad books may abound. Publishers and booksellers will take no notice of the scruples and repugnance of men of taste until the day when they shall have become legion. So we must await a general progress of knowledge and critical sense which may not soon show itself. Publishers will continue until then to put forth a crowd of books devoid of any taste or value; and if, by chance, they who live in clover should not buy them, the producer who speculates on their folly will cry hold.

'As to knowing if an addition of twenty-five or ten centimes is acceptable to the buyer or not, that seems to me beside the discussion. For everything depends on the pleasure or profit derived by the reader. As a general or rather universal rule, without a known or conceivable exception, a good book, even when dear, is worth what it costs; but a bad book, even if cheap, is always too dear.'

THE STOPFORD BROOKE LECTURESHIP.

The opening lecture given by Mr. Stopford Brooke in the Botanical Theatre, University College, dealt with the qualities that go to make up poetry. Mr. Blake Odgers, Q.C., was in the chair, and explained that the lectureship had been founded to do honour to Mr. Brooke's work in literature, and that it was the hope of the committee that the lectureship would be a permanent one. The fund now amounted to about £800, but £3,000, at least, was required to make the lectureship permanent. Subjoined are the draft heads of the proposed trust deed of the fund as now arranged by the committee:—I. The trust to be vested in University College, London. II. The objects of the trust to be: (a) To pay to Mr. Stopford Brooke the income of the fund as far as may be necessary for courses of lectures in literature; (b) in the event of Mr. Brooke's resignation, to some other lecturer for lectures of a similar kind. III. The administration of the fund to be on the advice of a committee, constituted as hereinafter mentioned. IV. The committee to consist of twelve members: (a) Four representing subscribers; (b) two representing the Council of University College; (c) two representing the Senate of University College, one to be the Quain Professor of English for the time being; (d) one representing the Technical Education Board of the London County Council; (e) one representing London School Board; (f) one representing the American subscribers (being the American Ambassador or some member of the United States Embassy); (g) one representative of Art. V. The committee to hold office for three years, and vacancies to be filled by the respective appointing bodies; but vacancies in (a) to be filled by subscribers for the first nine years only, after that term appointment by the rest of the committee; (g) to be filled by the committee subject to the approval of the council of University College. VI. The committee to meet at least twice a year, and make reports from time to time on all matters affecting the lectureship, including variation of place and time of lectures, amounts to be paid to lecturers, appointment of lecturer, &c. VII. When Mr. Brooke ceases to lecture, appointment to be made of a fresh lecturer for a period not exceeding three years, eligible for re-appointment for another three years, and no lecturer to have the appointment for more than six years without an interval of one year. VIII. No restrictions as to nationality or qualification for the lectureship, except that the lectures must be delivered in English, and on literature from the humanistic point of view. IX. Admission to the lectures to be by ticket; the committee to be able to charge for some seats, but at least half of the seats to be always free. Subscriptions or donations will be received by the hon. secretaries, Mr. C. Herbert-Smith, 2 Garden Court, Temple, or Miss K. M. Warren, 8 Balcombe Street, Dorset Square, W.

INDEX-MAKING.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—The letter of Mr. Samson in your last issue has brought to my mind an historic example of an index made expressly to support the argument of the book. The work in question is William Prynne's 'Histrio-Mastix or Player's Scourge,' published in 1633. It is a thick quarto of over a thousand pages, and the index or table contains many entries of interest; a few may be cited:

Adams, his fall and apostasie by resorting to a play house.
Adultery occasioned by stage playes.
Baptisme, the pompes and dancing the very pompes of the Devill which we renounce in Baptisme.
Christians not to read playes, but good bookes.
Crossing of the face when men goe to playes, shuts in the Devill.
Damnation oft occasioned by stage playes.
Dancing a badge of lewde, lascivious women.
Devils the inventors of stage-playes.
Examples of Gods fearefull judgements upon Play-poets.
Heaven, no stage-playes there.
Herod smitten in the Theater by an Angell and so dyed.
Idlenesse a dangerous mischievous sinne occasioned by stage-playes.
Magistrates ought to suppresse players.
Manners of people corrupted by Playes.
Murthers occasioned oft by Playes.
Paul would not have a lodging neere the Play-house.
Plagues occasioned by Stage-Playes.

As one who has had much experience of index-making, and suffered much from index-makers, may I say how glad I am to note the general improvement in the indexes of the last few years? If publishers would print the indexer's name at the head of each index, I am sure it would tend to still further improve their work.

Yours faithfully,
[illegible]

The Tate Library,
Brixton, S.W.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. E. M. Samson, who writes in defence of the indexer of a certain work, seems to overlook the fact that a good index should present, as a rule, a generalisation of details and not the details themselves. Consequently, the offending item pointed out by Mr. Batterbury should have been covered by a sub-entry under the deceased artist's name, such as 'habits' or 'temperate habits.'

Mr. Samson has doubtless learned from his lengthy experience that the chief test of an indexer's qualifications lies in his ability to summarise a page, or more, of a book in two or three words. And this principle is particularly applicable to biographical works.

I am,
Yours truly,
H. [illegible]

BOOKS THAT GO AT THE LIBRARIES.

A well-known novelist who chooses to conceal his identity under the name of 'Wentworth Smee' contributes to the Sunday Sun some interesting remarks on 'Long or Short Novels.' He was talking the other day to the librarian of a circulating library, and was enlightened on several points concerning which he confesses his ignorance had hitherto been colossal. For instance, he was told that the longer novels are the better for their authors, and asked to have the heresy explained. 'Well, you see,' the librarian said, 'the whole thing is so exceedingly simple that it lies in a nutshell. You must look at it not only from the author's point of view, but from the circulating library's also. The library clerk is bound to save himself and his employers all the trouble he can. Now, if a subscriber comes in and asks for a long book, the clerk knows very well that the subscriber will take twice the time to get through that book that he will occupy in reading one of half the length. That stands to reason. Anything which tends to the saving of time and labour is an economy, so you can't wonder that when a new book is submitted to the circulating library for subscription the first impulse of the Press Censor is to look at its length. If it is a hundred and fifty thousand word book he knows that it will keep people busy for a long time, and so orders as many copies as he possibly can. The young author who realises this has taken the first step to Fame and Fortune.'

Now what are you to say, asks the amazed novelist, to rank heresy like this? Hitherto I have been under the impression that it is not the length of a story which made for its success, but the quality. Now, however, the whole thing seems to have become reduced to a question of circulating libraries. After a reference to the custom that prevailed in the days of Thackeray and Dickens, he goes on: 'Nowadays, a great many authors would prefer to make their books the reasonable length of sixty thousand words. A great deal can be said in sixty thousand words, and the story gains, as a rule, by not being longer. In the old days, when books were fewer, an author would have been considered a fraud if he made his book anything less than a hundred and fifty thousand words, or thereabouts. But, in many instances, we have altered all that.

'That reminds me of one modern writer who is popularly supposed to have killed the three-volume system. He was actuated by a belief that modern books, as a rule, were not long enough, and so he wrote a three-volume-novel, each volume containing a hundred thousand words. This was too much, even for the circulating libraries.' This reason for the abolition of the three-volume novel is amusing, and may for aught we know be sound. But it is not amusing to the artist in fiction to find that booksellers and circulating libraries prefer long books.

CHEAP ENGLISH NOVELS FROM A GERMAN POINT OF VIEW.

The London correspondent of the Vossische Zeitung thus writes of the sixpenny editions of English works of fiction: 'Sir Walter Besant may well exclaim with the magician's disciple in Goethe's ballad that he cannot get rid of the spirits he has summoned. Everyone knows it is owing to him and to the not less famous writer, Hall Caine, that novels have become cheaper these last ten years. The time is past never to return when, to please the circulating libraries, romances were invariably published in three volumes and offered to the public for a guinea and a half, although the libraries could buy them for a moiety of that price. The Englishman who formerly never purchased novels because of their exorbitant prices no longer hesitates to buy a book by his favourite author, especially if he can get the volume published at six shillings for four shillings and sixpence. Ten years ago it would have been impossible to print 100,000 copies of a new novel such as Marie Corelli's "Master-Christian," for no one would have bought the book. That the Englishman now buys romances and also reads them is in no small degree due to Sir Walter Besant, who, as President of the Authors' Club (? Incorporated Society of Authors), years ago contended that the public would soon buy novels if they were only offered cheaply enough. Six shillings seems to him, and to many of his professional colleagues, the cheapest price at which a good story ought to be offered to the public. Besides, for this sum you receive the volume tastefully bound; and, if you go to the right booksellers, you can even get it 25 per cent. cheaper. Even at this price the bookseller has a profit of about a shilling on the volume (?) provided a certain number of copies are sold. Of late new novels have come into the book trade which are published at the fabulously low price of sixpence. It is here not a question of books no longer enjoying copyright protection, such as some of the novels of George Eliot, but of comparatively new books by writers yet living, such as Thomas Hardy, Clark Russell, Hall Caine, and others, which may be had at all the book shops very clearly printed in paper covers for sixpence. Sir Walter Besant has now energetically protested against these cutting prices, because they yield nothing for the author. And this not quite unjustly; for of late years the conviction has become rooted in the public mind that sixpence and not six shillings is the price for a good novel. Weak, on the other hand, is Sir Walter Besant's thesis that these cheap books will be prejudicial to playgoing, because the Cockney will prefer buying a good story to going to the theatre. So far no complaints have been made against cheap romances by theatrical managers.'

MAJOR POND ON MARK TWAIN.

Mr. S. L. Clemens, who has just returned to America after an absence of several years, has had a princely reception, as he deserves. His connection with a New York publishing firm, whereby he lost his entire fortune, will be remembered by our readers, and his recent journeyings abroad were made in order to earn enough money to pay the creditors in full. In our prosaic day Mark Twain has, in fact, done what Scott did in a time more ardently devoted to romance. He might have availed himself of the legal privilege of paying a certain percentage of the debts; but this he declined to do, and he now returns to his native land having paid the last dollar that the unfortunate firm with which he was associated owed. Major Pond, the well-known lecture agent, has been telling the American people how this heroic task was accomplished. On July 15, 1895, he began his tour in Cleveland. There an audience of 3,000 people gave him a send-off on a mid-July night, with the mercury in the nineties. He had been very ill, subject to many annoyances from being dragged from a sick bed to appear in supplementary proceedings in New York the day before starting. He lectured all over the world, made money, and conceived a violent dislike to the platform. 'I wrote,' says Major Pond, 'offering him $10,000 if he would deliver ten lectures on his return home this autumn. He replied that no terms I could offer would remove his prejudice against the platform. He had lectured once in Vienna and once in Budapest, for fun, not for money; that he liked to talk for nothing about twice a year; but talking for money was work, and "that takes the pleasure out of it."

'I consider Mark Twain,' continues the eloquent Major, 'one of the greatest geniuses of our time. I think I know him better than he is known to most men—wide as his circle of acquaintance is, big as his reputation is. He is as great a man as he is a genius, too. Tenderness and sensitiveness are his two strongest traits. He has one of the best hearts that ever beat. One must know him well fully to discern all of his best traits. I sometimes think that he fights shy of having it generally suspected that he is kind and tender-hearted, but many of his friends do know it. He possesses some of the frontier traits—a fierce spirit of retaliation and the absolute confidence that lifelong "partners" in the Western sense develop. Injure him and he is merciless, especially if you betray his confidence.'

This is how the Major winds up: '"Mark Twain," a printer's apprentice in a small Missouri River town, then a "tramping jour" printer, a Missouri River roustabout, guarding freight piles all night on the levee for pocket money; a river pilot, a rebel guerrilla, a reporter in a Nevada mining town, then suddenly the most famous author of the age, a man of society, the most aristocratic clubs of America and all around the civilised globe flung open to him; adopted with all the honours into one of the most exclusive societies on this continent; the favoured companion of the most cultivated spirits of the age, welcomed abroad in all Courts almost as a crowned head. "Peace hath its victories," &c.'

English people will read with interest and sympathy the glowing accounts of Mark Twain's reception by admiring compatriots.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. William Wilson.

We deeply regret to have to announce the death of Mr. William Wilson, for nearly thirty years manager of the firm of Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co., which took place at his residence, Meadowcroft, Woodside Park, North Finchley, on Monday, Nov. 5. Mr. Wilson was the eldest son of the late Mr. E. Chater Wilson, printer, of Skinner Street, Snow Hill. He was born on June 11, 1833, and commenced his career as a printer in his father's office. In 1855 he entered the service of the great firm in New-street Square, and was appointed manager in 1873. In the course of the many years during which Mr. Wilson held that important appointment he was brought into intimate relations with many leading authors and with the heads of most of the great publishing houses, by whom he was held in high esteem. It is interesting to note that the first number of the Publishers' Circular was produced at the office of Mr. Wilson's father, in Skinner Street, on October 2, 1837, and it continued to be printed there until it was transferred to the office of Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co., its present printers, so that he may be said to have been connected with this Journal during the whole of his business life, and he always took a lively interest in its welfare. Mr. Wilson was at business so recently as October 18, and though for some months past he had not been in the enjoyment of his usual health, his death was unexpected. He was seized with a severe attack of influenza, and was thought to be progressing satisfactorily, when erysipelas supervened, to which he succumbed. His death is greatly regretted by the members of the firm, and by his colleagues, all of whom held him in great regard.

In October 1856 Mr. Wilson married Louisa E. Adams, daughter of the late William Adams, law stationer, of Chancery Lane, who survives him.

The funeral will take place at Marylebone Cemetery, East Finchley, to-day (Saturday), at 2.30 P.M.

REMINISCENCES OF DOSTOÏEFFSKY.

In view of the great interest taken in Russian fiction, not only by critics but by intelligent readers all over the world, the following recollections of Dostoïeffsky have a particular interest. They were recently published by Mme. Mikoulitch in a St. Petersburg periodical. The famous novelist is described as 'a little, pale, sickly-looking man with a scanty fair beard, a wrinkled forehead, and piercing eyes.'

THE LATE MR. WILLIAM WILSON

Mme. Mikoulitch was a young girl of eighteen, and only just engaged to be married, when, in the spring of 1879, a lady friend introduced her to a St. Petersburg family Dostoïeffsky often and gladly visited. He had already published his last novel, 'The Brothers Karamasof,' in which he insists more forcibly than in his other books on his truly Christian ideal of renunciation, resignation, and forgiveness. Mme. Mikoulitch was so much moved on seeing the author of a book which had so greatly impressed her that when her hostess offered to introduce her to the illustrious writer she ran away terrified to the other end of the drawing-room, where she passed the rest of the evening in quietly observing her literary hero.

'I never once,' she said, 'heard him raise his voice in contradiction, although most of the guests held opinions opposed to his own. He generally kept silence, and only at times responded to a question directly addressed to him. He spoke admirably, with much warmth and conviction. That evening he spoke of Catholicism, and cursed Western civilisation and life, in which everything was being sapped and decomposed from day to day. Then, according to him, the mission of the Russian people ought to begin. He had a very strong faith in this mission of the Russian people, in its moral force (the proof of which he found in its capacity of suffering and resignation); and it was by it that he expected the world to be converted to true Christianity.'

Dostoïeffsky often visited the house, but it was long before Madame Mikoulitch summoned up courage to be introduced to him. At last, one evening, a few weeks before his death, Dostoïeffsky, having observed this young girl, who never spoke to him but also never withdrew her eyes from him, asked her to play cards. At first they played in silence, but presently began to chat, and the young girl, growing bolder, began to question her partner on literary and other subjects. Then he interrogated her. 'You are about to be married? What is your character? Are you capricious? Are you good and generous? Are you constant in your attachments? Are you pious? Do you pray much, and how do you pray? Do you remember the evil you have done? Do you know how to forgive?' The young girl was overwhelmed by so many questions, and scarcely knew how to reply. In order to recover herself she began to put questions in her turn, and asked if he had written anything before "Poor Folk," his first published work. Dostoïeffsky replied that he had written nothing original, but had translated the romances of Balzac into Russian.

'He had a passionate liking for Balzac; and, when he heard that I had not read "Eugénie Grandet," he enjoined me to procure and read at once "Père Goriot," "Parents pauvres," and "Un grand homme de province à Paris." "Read that, read that carefully and, if you like it, I shall mention other books to you, and tell you what pleases me the most in them!" I asked him what he thought of Zola as compared with Balzac. He told me he had only read two romances by Zola, the "Fortune des Rougon" and "Nana," and he had made up his mind to stop there. "So you think Balzac superior?" "Infinitely," he answered, smiling as if my question appeared childish. "Well, then, tell me which you think superior, Balzac or you?" This time he responded very seriously: "A writer has value only by that which is personal and original in his contributions to literature. So that it is always impossible to compare two writers. I believe that we two, Balzac and I, have our own merit." I wished then to ask him about Tolstoi, but the talk diverged to contemporary French novelists, Flaubert, the Goncourts, and Daudet. He only admired the first of these writers, and only cared to read one of his romances a second time.'

At last Mme. Mikoulitch contrived to introduce Tolstoi's name. 'Oh!' exclaimed Dostoïeffsky, 'he is a great power! The most marvellous talent we have ever had in Russia, and he has not yet said all he has to say.'

Then he spoke of the mission of a writer, and of the part which art will play in the society of the future. Afterwards, recollecting that he was speaking to a betrothed girl, he said he should be pleased to learn she was happy, and inquired tenderly as to the character of her intended. 'And do not fail,' he added, 'to read the "Père Goriot," and you must tell me what

REVIEWS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Lord Linlithgow,' by Morley Roberts. Why Mr. Roberts should have called his novel by this name is not very plain, seeing that his lordship only occupies a subsidiary position in the plot. However, he is the means of bringing about a satisfactory ending—a kind of beneficent fairy godfather, in short—so that it is only right some distinction should be paid to him. The real story concerns a rising young politician, Murray Harford, who, in order to procure his own advancement and thereby secure the hand of the woman he loves, is tempted to force the editor of an opposition party paper to give up possession of some highly compromising papers by a threat that he (Harford) will divulge certain incriminating facts in regard to the private life of the editor. Under these circumstances the papers are handed over; but afterwards there is a great row, the unfortunate editor is accused of having sold his party, and in a scene at the club he publicly accuses Harford of having blackmailed him. Truth to tell, the hero does not come out any too well in the narrative, though the temptation to his action is fully enlarged upon. In the end Lord Linlithgow comes forward and, by his patronage of Harford, secures his rehabilitation in the social world, and all ends happily. Mr. Roberts, we think, has written better novels than this, but none that more successfully displays his terseness, vigour, and rough description of character.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'A King's Pawn,' by Hamilton Drummond. The central figure in this stirring romance is Blaise de Bernauld, staunch adherent of the wayward Henry of Navarre. The king sends him on a prospecting expedition into the south of Spain, afterwards electing under an assumed name to be one of the party himself. To Blaise de Bernauld in particular the adventure is fraught with the greatest danger, for in days gone by, when in Florida, he had killed the son of a Spanish woman, Donna Teresa Saumarez, as well as committed other offences against the Government; and for this reason a price has been placed on his head and many attempts made to assassinate him. The experiences of the little party in Spain are indeed very exciting. As may naturally be expected, they actually fall into the hands of the revengeful Donna Teresa and her retainers, and their adventures are perilous in the extreme. The story is told with much spirited buoyancy, and has an attractive roystering swing that can scarcely fail to be of effect with the reader. Though it may possibly be open in its general character to the charge of imitation, it is an admirable example of the present-day school of historical romancists, and in some respects almost transcends the efforts of the masters of the craft.

From F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig.—'Die Positive Monismus und das einheitliche Princip aller Erscheinungen,' von Gustav Ratzenhofer. In a singularly lucid preface, wherein the author relates how he came to inquire into human correlations, he says that when he wrote 'Die sociologische Erkenntniss,' published last year, he contemplated the present book. 'A process of thought, accomplished in me long ago, in part independently and in part under the influence peculiar to authorship, led me to recognise, when preparing the above-named work, which investigates the laws of human correlations, the necessity for extending my inquiries to the extremest confines of knowledge, even had I wished to think a scientific edifice completed with "Wesen und Zweck der Politik" published in 1893. I had, in fact, verified an experience common to every conscientious thinker: that individual scientific inquiry only attains its full value when it can be brought into a systematic cohesion with the general principles of being. . . . So soon as human correlations are recognised as phenomena of the active powers of nature there results the necessity of synthetically restoring the cohesion of natural science with sociology; and hence it was seen that only in this way is a complete knowledge of nature possible. The effectual sufficiency of the laws of nature in all domains of phenomena became evident. The investigation of social phenomena taught that those doubts which surprise us when observing individual beings in relation to the unity of nature and spirit, disappear so soon as we keep their social action in view. Thus sociological perception closes the circle of scientific perception, and shows that our whole knowledge is only natural perception and all science only natural science. This insight also gives us a hint that the time is past when natural science and philosophy stand alienated from each other, and that rather must the naturalist or historian become a philosopher in the strictest sense of the word while independent speculative philosophy sinks into the background like a stage which has been passed on the road to intellectual development.' Nothing could be clearer or more thorough than the author's exposition of his important and interesting subject, and in few books can be found such an array of physical and psychical facts as are treated of in the small compass of 155 pages. The work is provided with an index which enhances its value.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Motor Vehicles and Motors, their Design, Construction, and Working by Steam, Oil, and Electricity,' by W. Worby Beaumont. The object of this handsome volume is 'to put its readers into possession of an accurate and critical account of modern forms of mechanically propelled road vehicles of every kind, and to give as many illustrations and descriptions as may be necessary to represent the chief types of motors and vehicles of the ninety-ninth year of the nineteenth century.' This object has been very fully carried out, and in the thirty-nine chapters of which the book consists every phase of the subject has been considered. Not only has Mr. Beaumont a practical acquaintance with his subject, but it is plain to perceive that there is something of the enthusiast in him. Into the various details, such as the modern period and modern motor, recent high speed long distance petrol motor vehicles, petrol motor cycles, electric motor vehicles, modern and recent steam vehicles, and so forth, he enters with an ardour that shows an extreme interest in his subject, and which is all to the advantage of the reader. The numerous illustrations are a noteworthy and important feature of the work, and there is also a capital index, with several tables. In one of the last named the author contrasts the cost of a horse-hauled carriage with the motor vehicle, from which he deduces a result all in favour of the motor. The volume is exceedingly practical and informative, and in its general production reflects great credit on the publishers. It should be found of excellent service by all who are interested in the subject of motor road machines.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Black Pilgrim: a Tale of Struggle for Faith and Freedom in the Balkan Peninsula,' by Michael Czajkowski. Translated by S. C. de Soissons. An absorbing story of romantic adventure among the Slavs. The heroic actions are described with an impetuous vigour and warmth of expression that is certain to enlist the hearty sympathy of the imaginative reader. The novelty of the surroundings will be a further attraction.

From the Gresham Publishing Company.—'History of the Lodge of Edinburgh (Mary's Chapel), No. 1, embracing an Account of the Rise and Progress of Freemasonry in Scotland,' by David Murray Lyon. This 'tercentenary edition' of a work first published some twenty-seven years ago was undertaken at the request of the master and office bearers of the Edinburgh Lodge, to whom the copyright and its attendant responsibilities have been conveyed. Much new and interesting matter has been introduced into the present edition, including the text of a letter by Charles I., preserved among the State Papers in Her Majesty's General Register House, Edinburgh, in which the king questions the claims of the family of St. Clair of Roslin to the hereditary protectorate of the Mason Craft in Scotland under Crown writs, and directs inquiries to be made in regard to the same. The volume will be found full of interest for all who are concerned with freemasonry in Edinburgh, and the many fine portraits and other illustrations give an additional charm to a book which in its general production is worthy of the warmest praise.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Palace Tales,' by H. Fielding. There are in all eight stories in this volume, and they are of a very average degree of merit. They concern life at the palace at the time the kingdom of Upper Burma was still in existence, and the object of the author, as stated in the introduction, has been to rescue from complete oblivion one phase of life, and that the most entertaining, if trivial, in the palace at the time of the Burmese kings. The stories certainly have the merit of being extremely amusing, and there is a certain dry drollery in the dialogue which is bound to provoke laughter. As love is said to make the world go round, so love is the main topic of Mr. Fielding's theme; and very skilfully he uses it, to the accompaniment of an appropriate amount of local colouring. His stories are admirable in their way, and will be keenly relished by all who have an appreciation of quaint humour and novel surroundings.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Madness of David Baring,' by Joseph Hocking. We are afraid that it is only in works of fiction that poor hard-working students of Cambridge University unexpectedly come in for large fortunes from mysterious relatives whom they have previously little heard of; but if their after-experiences are as interesting as those detailed in Mr. Hocking's novel, we should be thankful for their appearance, if only in works of fiction. But few people, we imagine, would renounce their money, position, and property, as David Baring does. This is what constitutes his so-called 'madness.' What results from this step we must leave the reader to find out. We may prepare him for several surprises in the course of the story, which certainly add to its interest. By many people, no doubt, David Baring's conduct would be considered rather quixotic, but—we shall say no more. Readers will find this a very interesting story, and will probably be grateful to Mr. Hocking for the plain unaffected fashion in which it is told.

From Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.—'Plotters of Paris,' by Edmund Mitchell. There are practically three distinct stories in this volume, though certain of the characters appear in each. The framework of the narratives is ingeniously constructed on the foundation of a mysterious crime, and the unravelling of the plot is conducted according to the system originated by Gaboriau. All the stories are productive of very exciting moments, and are told with a keen appreciation of theatrical effect. The reader who once throws in his fortunes with Mr. Mitchell will find his companionship thoroughly enjoyable to the end of their journey.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'The Heiress of the Forest: a Romance of Old Anjou,' by Eleanor C. Price. Miss Price has accomplished rather a difficult task in this novel. She has managed to carry the reader's mind back some two hundred years, and to interest him in the doings of a number of people with whom for the most part he can have little sympathy. This is mainly brought about by a simple unaffected style, and some earnestness of expression. Several of the characters also are depicted with considerable skill, and the tone of the French surroundings is admirably sustained. To those who do not wish to be thrilled by sensational incident, we can recommend this story as likely to afford them an evening's pleasant enjoyment.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Sons.—'Studies in Texts for Family, Church, and School.' by Joseph Parker, D.D. Volume VI. With this instalment the series of 'Studies in Texts' comes to a conclusion. We have little to add to what has already been expressed in these columns of previous volumes. The subjects are excellently chosen, and are treated by Dr. Parker in his usual pithy, trenchant manner. His style may not be above suspicion, but he is never dull, never laboured. He propounds his views with a jerky vivacity that invariably hits the mark. The reader will always have an impression of straight hitting from the shoulder; and in the present day of courteous inanity, when every man seems afraid of expressing his real opinions for fear of offending his neighbour, this is an agreeable relief.

From the same.—'The Grip of the Wolf,' by Morice Gerard. This is a capital story of warlike adventure, coupled with an inspiriting amount of romance, in the days when Prussia was overrun by a large number of Free Companies and split up into several independent States. Militarism and romance are so happily blended as to produce a most excellent effect, and the reader will find himself held at every portion of the narrative. 'The Grip of the Wolf' is one of the best stories the author has yet written.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Tongues of Conscience,' by Robert Hichens. Of the five stories composing this volume, the first, 'Sea Change,' is perhaps the most important, and it supplies an excellent index to the character of the remaining contents. It describes the visit paid by a celebrated London painter, Sir Graham Hamilton, to the house of a country clergyman, the Rev. Peter Uniache, whose habitation may almost be said to be fixed in the sea itself, so closely and noisily is it surrounded by the sound of the driving wind and dashing waves. The painter, whose health is much enfeebled, is haunted by the remembrance of a boy named Tom Pascoe, whose welfare he had entirely neglected after the solicitude he might have shown. Now the boy was dead, and all that remains to be patient is an urgent call to see his mother, who periodically makes trips from Penry Lane to inquire if he has heard anything of her son and to reproach him with his conduct. Strangely enough, it so happens that in the churchyard of the village where Sir Graham Hamilton repairs for the benefit of his health the body of the boy—at the time of his death seventeen years of age—lies buried, cast up as a derelict from the wreck of the schooner 'Flying Fish.' Much of the interest of the story depends upon the efforts of the kindly clergyman to conceal this fact from his quest, and at last he is driven to deliberate lying. It will thus be seen that the framework of the story is particularly slight, and the same remark may be passed on other portions of the book. Mr. Hichens, however, possesses certain capabilities of refined treatment which go far to compensate for any deficiencies of plot, and these stories are likely to appeal strongly to the more cultivated of readers.

From the same.—'Servants of Sin: a Romance, by John Bloundelle-Burton. A certain breezy buoyancy which is characteristic of the author's previous novels is very observable in this, his latest work. The incidents of the story are supposed to take place in France at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and they embrace as thrilling a series of adventures as the mind of imaginative reader could desire. As proof of this assertion, it will be necessary only to relate the chief event, upon which the framework of the story hangs. In order to escape the odious attentions of the Duc Desparre, who is supported in his pretensions by her false guardian, the beautiful heroine marries a chivalrous Englishman, who is content to afford her the protection of his name without receiving any love in return. On the very evening of the marriage, Desparre, with a body of assassins, intercepts the young husband and leaves him for dead in the street, while the poor wife is thrown into the prison of St. Martin des Champs, on the pretence of having tried to murder her persecutor, and is subsequently sent to Marseilles with other convicts for shipment to the French Settlement at New Orleans. How Walter Clarges recovers from his wound and rescues her, with the terrible retribution that overwhelms the villains of the plot, all this and other exciting matter the reader must be left to find out for himself. We can promise him that his pulse will be considerably quickened during the process.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Heart's Highway: a Romance of Virginia in the Seventeenth Century,' by Mary E. Wilkins. In that quaint Old English style which she has marvellously cultivated, Miss Wilkins here tells the love story of a brave manly young tutor in the family of the Cavendishes towards the close of the seventeenth century. The object of his adoration is his pupil, pretty Mistress Mary Cavendish; but he has no hopes of being successful in his desires, seeing that he has been dubbed convict through taking on his shoulders the crime of another. The story is very gracefully told, and in the course of the narrative there is no lack of stirring scenes and hard fighting. It is chiefly, however, to the lover of the refined and picturesque that the novel will successfully appeal, for the character of the old-fashioned language seems to take away something from the force of the more exciting descriptive passages. The charm of the story is undoubted, but it mainly results from the subdued, delicate conception.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The New Order: a Novel of To-day,' by Oswald Crawfurd. We must confess to feeling a little disappointed in this work. From the preface we learnt that Mr. Crawfurd proposed to write a novel on somewhat old-fashioned lines, taking for his theme the adventures of a single character as he traversed the paths of modern life. This sounded promising, and the story itself opens well; but afterwards Mr. Crawfurd becomes heavy and laboured, and exhibits little of that lightness of touch and dexterous arrangement of detail which is so essential to the complete success of a work of this description. The promulgation of a Cause as put forward in these pages no doubt necessitates a certain amount of conversational argument, but here it is allowed to obtrude and become wearisome. Mr. Crawfurd is very unequal in his work, at some moments being bright and entertaining, at others evincing a want of literary discrimination that is a little surprising in a writer of his long experience. But his story on the whole will be found interesting; and if we have drawn attention to certain defects it is because the reputation of the author, and his somewhat pretentious preface, had led us to expect a work of greater merit.

From the same.—'A Man's Woman,' by Frank Norris. For bright vigorous description, entertaining incident, and warmth of colouring generally commend us to this novel. It may not be the best of Mr. Frank Norris's works, but it comes near it. The reader who takes up this book has a pleasant time before him. He will find as he grows accustomed to the author's style that it has a wonderful fascination for him, and he will speedily be so interested in the entanglements of the plot that he will not be able to extricate himself before the final chapter is reached. Mr. Norris knows thoroughly how to fix the attention of his readers, and once having done this he takes them through the narrative at a gallop. Between the lines of his book we seem to learn something of the bright, breezy personality of the author, and this personal element in the story counts for no little.

From Schleicher Frères, Librairie C. Reinwald, Paris.—'Etat actuel de nos Connaissances sur l'Origine de l'Homme,' par Ernest Haeckel, Professeur à l'Université d'Iéna. Traduit par le Dr. L. Laloy. As this able synopsis of the present state of knowledge of man's origin from the Darwinian standpoint was read in English before the fourth International Zoological Congress at Cambridge in August 1898, and has been published in this country, we need here only refer to the preface which Dr. Laloy has prefixed to his excellent translation. He emphasises the fact that Professor Haeckel's paper is of great importance because it takes note of the most recent discoveries in biology, and of the influence they have exercised on the theory of the descent of man. It also comprises certain data only to be met with in works by Haeckel which have not yet been translated into French. The genealogical tables, too, have been somewhat modified since those contained in his 'Anthropogénie' and 'History of the Creation.' Dr. Laloy insists on the injury done to the so-called inferior animals by assuming man to be lord of the creation. 'I think,' he says, 'that by exalting "human dignity" that is, pride—and by neglecting to inculcate in its disciples pity towards the rest of the organic world, Christianity has committed a grievous fault.' Whatever our opinion of the value of Darwinism, there can be no doubt whatever of the duty of teaching that the so-called lower animals should be treated with kindness and not as automata. Dr. Laloy's thesis is convincingly argued.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'Daunay's Tower,' by Adeline Sergeant. The author shows the hand of the experienced novelist in this story, and out of material which is perhaps not very promising she has constructed a plot that will forcibly hold the attention of the reader throughout. Many of the characters, also, are capitally conceived, and their various attributes are sketched with a dexterity that shows a close observation of certain types of humanity. The story as a whole is distinctly interesting.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

A Book for Lovers of Japan

HONEY OF LOTUS

[From the 'Daily Chronicle,' November 5, 1900.]

SHADOWINGS. By LAFCADIO HEARN. (London: Sampson Low, Marston and Co. 8s. 6d. net.)

This book, with shadowy lotus on the cover, is full of strange enchantments. Here you may taste the peculiar honey of Eastern mysticism, or sup, if you will, on macabre stories of old Japan.

Travellers seldom bring us news of the souls of the countries they have visited. The shrines and holy places of a people's spirit need no dragons to guard them. They remain, of their nature, forever invisible to the profane. But it is not as one of the profane that Mr. Lafcadio Hearn writes of Japan, his adopted mother-country. He has long loved her and pondered upon her mysteries, and in a land so fascinating, yet so strange to us, among ideals and customs at which our halting imagination often hesitates, we could ask no apter or wiser interpreter and guide.

If we had more delicate senses, it has been said, we should be able to hear the grass growing, and perhaps a finer sensory and imaginative equipment is needed to enable us to understand and appreciate the Japanese—their fantastic standard of courtesy, their seeming simplicity of living, which is really the exquisite last word of centuries of fine civilisation, their religious fastidiousness and nicety in all matters of art and ornament. Doubtless if the most æsthetic of us could see his favourite wallpaper through Japanese eyes he would call on the mountains to cover him and it.

But how comes the author of these delightful essays by his superior insight? He is Western-born, like ourselves. His style reveals not unpleasing traces of a former state of existence when, presumably, the star-spangled banner waved about his infancy. Was some Buddhist miracle worked on his behalf? Possibly; yet this kind cometh not but by prayer and fasting. Certain it is that he knows his Japan as few of the Western-born can hope to know her. He went to teach the youth of Tokyo, but remained to learn the ancient and mysterious wisdom of the East, and in these strange, fine little books of Japanese studies which we have learned to look for from his pen, the East and the West seem to draw nearer together, science and mysticism are at peace upon his pages, and the doctrine of heredity finds its spiritual counterpart in the cult of ancestral ghosts.

Beside the shadowy phantoms of that No-Man's-Land which lies between death and life, between sleeping and waking, many daylight shadows of lovesome things flit across the pages, shadows of boughs in blossom, shadows of butterflies, shadows of the little singing Sémi (cicadæ), 'weaving the thread of a voice,' feeding on 'drops of dew cut up small,' celebrated by many a Japanese Meleager. But loveliest of all is the wing-like shadow of a silken sleeve, which seems to exhale a faint perfume of sandal-wood and plum blossom as it hovers:

'Flower is it—butterfly is it?'

sings the Japanese lover—

'When you come thus flickering, I am deluded!
When you come thus twinkling I am bewitched!'

That loose, hanging sleeve of archaic outline with something winglike, something flower-like in its form is the Japanese woman's symbol. When in her gorgeous kimono she quaintly dances, its silken sleeves wave and flicker about her. If flowers had wings they would be of this pattern, her gestures are a flight of butterflies, she bows herself like a flowering rush in the wind, the filmy vest, fold on fold, from which her little neck springs, is like the reverted spathe of a lily. If she weep, it is behind her sleeve's kind shelter that she hides her silent tears, till the brave smiles have been summoned up again. Like a broken wing it lies piteously across the face of the dead. If she, the loving one, is forsaken, she makes no claims, utters no reproaches, but she goes to fill her gay sleeve with stones, and so drowns herself; and should she hesitate upon the brink it is not through fear, but lest the beloved, faithless one might suffer any pang of self-reproach at her death. For this creature of delicate enchantments has been schooled to an austere self-control, and is capable of tragic passion as intense as her self-devotion is unlimited. Her austerity is all for herself, the divine quality of her forbearance is never strained. This humming-bird has the soul of an Alcestis. 'Perhaps the very sweetest type of woman the world has ever known,' says the author, and we believe he has a right to wear her colours and to maintain her praise.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS

Two New Works by Captain A. T. MAHAN, U.S.N.

NOW READY.

STORY OF THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA

By Captain A. T. MAHAN, U.S.N., Author of 'The Life of Nelson,' 'The Influence of Sea Power on History,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth extra, with Map, 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

In the MORNING POST, Mr. SPENSER WILKINSON says: 'Captain Mahan is so profound a student of war that all that he writes in relation to it is valuable. His story of the South African War has the marks of his usual grasp and breadth of treatment. He tells the events in outline . . . with a commentary of which the purpose is to illustrate the general principles which underlie the conduct of campaigns. To every reader who is trying to understand war this comment will be most helpful, and it gives the whole story a lucidity and an attraction which it could hardly otherwise possess. . . . His whole volume appeals most sympathetically to British readers.'

'The reader who has hitherto depended upon popular accounts of the war will now appreciate and welcome guidance over the extensive field by an historian who knows the business of war so well as to be able to make the whole thing clear in comparatively little space. . . . The praise for the British for steady, forward gallantry will be most gratifying to British readers. Captain Mahan is greatly impressed with the effect the war has had on the development of the idea of Imperial Federation. . . . The mishaps of Reddersburg and Koornspruit do not detract from Captain Mahan's admiration of the rest of the campaign.'—DAILY NEWS.

'Many people will be eager to see what Captain Mahan has to say. . . . A foreign commentator, friendly to our nation, but nevertheless impartial, could not well avoid being instructive.'—STANDARD.

'It is of high value as giving an authoritative outsider's opinions on the strategy and temperament of the two races opposed.'—DAILY CHRONICLE.

By the same Author.

In the DAILY TELEGRAPH, September 8, Sir EDWIN ARNOLD writes: 'Everybody who loves the ocean, or likes to hear about it; everybody who sets high value upon gallant, fearless deeds; everybody who rejoices to see the triumphs of manhood over solitude, danger, and death itself should, and must, read this wonderful story of resolute adventure. I do not hesitate to call it the most extraordinary book, in its way, ever published.'

Scribner's Magazine

CHRISTMAS 1900 NUMBER.

IN this number of Scribner's Magazine its readers will find a remarkable collection of eight short stories, attractively illustrated, some beautiful examples of colour-printing, and a number of articles of special interest and value.

THE CONTENTS:

PICHOU

by HENRY VAN DYKE

A Story of the great Hudson Bay Wilderness, describing the adventurous life of a dog who managed to live down a bad name and win a high place in the community. It is illustrated by CHARLES S. CHAPMAN.

by ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON

tells of one of the bears that enjoy the Government's hospitality in Yellowstone Park, and incidentally afford amusement and occasionally excitement to the visitors there. Fully illustrated by the author.

THE CRANE

by FRANCIS CHURCHILL WILLIAMS

is the story of a steel giant that did the heavy lifting at the Sampson Steel Works and of what befell its master. Illustrated by CLIFFORD CARLETON.

THE EMIGRANT EAST

by ARTHUR COLTON

is a story of delicate sentiment and romance, the scene of which is a dusty old book-shop kept by a former professor of Arabic and Greek with his pretty daughter as assistant. The illustrations are by JESSIE WILLCOX SMITH.

THE LION'S MOUTH

by HENRY W. and ALICE DUER MILLER is a [illegible] lot of social comedy based upon the family, a certain type of woman [illegible] getting others into trouble. The illustrations are by H. C. CHRISTY.

THE VICE-CONSORT

by FRANK R. STOCKTON is one of the best and most original of the author's whimsical conceptions, full of drollery and human nature. It is illustrated by A. I. KELLER.

THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD

by OCTAVE THANET

tells of the fine friendship of two women, developed from a chance meeting. It is illustrated by HENRY HUTT.

AN UNTOLD STORY

by THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH

A delightful little sketch. Illustrated by JULES GUERIN.

OTHER CONTENTS

contributes a critical and illuminative paper on George Eliot and her work, and there are poems, 'The Point of View,' and 'The Field of Art.'

AN article on the art of Puvis de Chavannes, by the distinguished painter and art critic, Mr. JOHN LA FARGE, is a prominent feature of the number. It is illustrated with remarkable reproductions in colours of several of the most celebrated of the works of Puvis—altogether one of the most beautiful and successful schemes of colour illustration ever attempted in a magazine.

THE illustration for the cover of the Christmas number is by MAXFIELD PARRISH. This will be printed in nine colours and will be accepted as the finest production which this able artist has given us in a field in which he stands almost alone.

The frontispiece, by JESSIE WILLCOX SMITH, printed in colours, illustrates a short piece, by BERTHA GERNEAUX WOODS entitled 'The Child.'

NAPOLEON: THE LAST PHASE

By LORD ROSEBERY.

Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

DAILY NEWS.—"As an appreciation of Napoleon's character, as a picture of the Emperor's life at Longwood, Lord Rosebery's book is without doubt the most [illegible] appeared in England. It abounds in striking and pathetic passages, one of the most impressive of which is the description of the arrival of Napoleon's remains at the Invalides."

A remarkable feature of the autumn season up to the present is the large number of novels by writers of note which have appeared. Miss Marie Corelli led off with 'The Master-Christian' (Methuen), of which 150,000 copies have been printed, the largest number, we believe, ever issued of an English work of fiction within three months of first publication. From the bookseller's point of view it is the book of the season, and is so placarded in booksellers' windows, with 'Quisanté' and 'Tommy and Grizel' flanking it on either side. If the insignificant question of literary merit be disregarded, the honours so far lie with Miss Corelli. A brilliant second is furnished in Mrs. Humphry Ward's 'Eleanor' (Smith, Elder & Co.), which promises, as we have already remarked, to run 'Robert Elsmere' close in popularity. Mrs. Ward and Miss Corelli afford a striking, and in some ways an instructive, contrast. The first is literary to the core. She labours prodigiously, is critical, and has a conscientious sense of form. The latter seems to ignore form as completely as she ignores the critics, and the plan succeeds amazingly. For ourselves we much prefer to read Mrs. Ward, and her latest novel, though by no means free from her characteristic faults, seems to us the best she has written. There is still the old heaviness of style, the same plentiful lack of humour; but there are compensating qualities. The plot is good, the narrative in general is well managed, and the principal characters are in all essentials vital. When the story was appearing in Harper's Magazine we predicted for it a popular success in book form, and that success it has speedily achieved. And it may be added, what cannot always be said of contemporary fiction, that the success is on the whole deserved. In this her latest book Mrs. Ward shows an intensity and a dramatic faculty for which preceding works from her pen did not prepare us. Then the situations are skilfully contrived, the dialogue is unfailingly clever, and, above all, the interest after the first hundred pages or so, is never allowed to drop. It is in short a sound and admirable bit of writing, and it is encouraging to find such work making a triumphant appeal to the general reader.

Yet another book of mark by a lady is Mrs. Steel's 'The Hosts of the Lord' (Heinemann). If there is a fault to be found with Mrs. Steel it is that she knows her India too well. Mark Twain once remarked that it is a grave disadvantage to know much of any subject on which one intends to write, and the work of some novelists seems to bear him out. Mrs. Steel, like Mrs. Ward, is a model of conscientiousness; and her stories are in some particulars the best history of India yet written. 'The Hosts of the Lord' is in parts extremely interesting and in others extremely disappointing. If Mrs. Steel knew 'what to leave in the inkpot' she would stand considerably higher than she now stands. For her fault is to overburden her stories with detail. She does not bear her knowledge lightly, and the consequence is that she is frequently heavy both in matter and style. But at her best she is very good indeed, and several chapters of 'The Hosts of the Lord' are full of the colour and the romance of the East. We seem to see and smell what she describes, which is to say that she renders the peculiar atmosphere of India with singular success. The book as a whole falls short of the standard of 'On the Face of the Waters,' which is its author's masterpiece; but in parts, if only in parts, 'The Hosts of the Lord' is vivid and thrilling, and the characterisation, always the difficult part of a novelist's business, is at once bold and subtle. In spite of the defects to which we have referred we cordially commend the book to all readers in search of a story for a winter's evening.

Mrs. Ward and Mrs. Steel are strenuous and very much in earnest. In his new book, 'The Life and Death of Richard Yea-and-Nay' (Macmillan), Mr. Maurice Hewlett is, as usual, gaily adventurous, and lightly indifferent (as a writer of full-blooded romance ought to be) to problems or prickings of conscience. In Richard he has a character after his own heart, and the delineation must be accorded warm praise. It is fresh, virile, and striking. We see what Mr. Hewlett would have us see with great vividness, and much of what we see we remember. 'Richard Yea-and-Nay' has not the charm of 'The Forest Lovers,' but being more direct in style it may possibly be more popular. Occasionally the author's taste seems to be questionable. There are things in the book that may offend the fastidious, but it will fascinate readers who relish strong meat. It belongs to an order now rather out of favour, but we should be sorry to think it should lack appreciation because it does not conform to a fashion. Mr. Hewlett may be congratulated on having written the romance of the season.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are glad to know that a large number of orders have been received from the booksellers for 'The Times History of the War in South Africa.' It will be seen from the announcement on our back page that Volume I. of this 5 vol. work is to be published on Wednesday, Nov. 28, and on that date the price for the set of 5 vols. will be raised from £2. 12*s.* 6*d.* to £3. 3*s.* net, and possibly more, so that those who wish to take advantage of the subscription price should order promptly. As we have already pointed out, the booksellers are getting a discount on the subscription price, and on the published price they are to get the ordinary net terms, the aim of the publishers being to give the booksellers an interest in the work.

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have nearly ready a book bearing the title 'In the Ranks of the C.I.V.' The writer, Mr. Erskine Childers, who is a clerk in the House of Commons, was a driver in the corps, and he gives an account of the campaign as he saw it.

Among the forthcoming publications of Mr. John Murray is a 'Life of Gilbert White of Selborne,' in two volumes, by his great grandnephew Rashleigh Holt-White. Mr. Holt-White, who is the present head of the White family, has had access to MSS., journals, account books, and other unpublished papers of the naturalist, in addition to many letters of his, hitherto entirely unknown and unpublished, and a large and most interesting series of letters from his life-long friend and contemporary, the Rev. J. Mulso. A record of a visit to Selborne in the summer of 1763, in the shape of a journal kept by one of the 'Miss Batties,' to whom the well-known verses on 'Selborne Hanger—a Winter-piece' were addressed in the autumn of that year by Gilbert White, is also printed for the first time. Several photogravure portraits and numerous illustrations from family pictures will be included in the work.

A new quarterly journal devoted to the subject of hygiene will shortly make its appearance from the Cambridge University Press. It will be entitled The Journal of Hygiene, and the editorial department is to be under the control of Dr. Nuttall, assisted by Dr. John Haldane and Dr. Arthur Newsholme.

'Our Bird Friends' is the title of Mr. R. Kearton's new book which will be published in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Co. This work gives an account of the most curious characteristics and interesting habits of our wild birds at home amidst their natural surroundings, and contains a hundred illustrations from photographs by the author's brother, Mr. C. Kearton.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish an illustrated account of life in Vancouver by Miss Frances E. Herring, entitled 'Canadian Camp Life.' The volume is a record of personal reminiscences of camping out, and gives a graphic description of family life under such circumstances in these comparatively unfamiliar parts of the world.

Mr. Thomas Greenwood is preparing a new edition of his well-known work on 'Public Libraries.' It will be revised and in many portions rewritten.

An interesting gathering was held on November 9, when the employees of Messrs. John F. Shaw & Co., of 48 Paternoster Row, assembled to congratulate Mr. James Smith, one of the partners, on his completion of fifty years with the firm. Mr. Smith on that day fifty years ago was apprenticed to the late Mr. John Farquhar Shaw, the founder of the firm. This was at 27 Southampton Row, where the business had been carried on since 1832, with a branch at 36 Paternoster Row. Some of Mr. Smith's early business recollections go back to the publication of Dr. Cumming's 'Voices of the Night' and 'Benedictions,' of which it is interesting to recall 3,000 were subscribed at 7*s.*, a large number for fifty years ago. In 1860 Mr. John Shaw and Mr. Smith joined Mr. J. F. Shaw as partners in the firm, and the friendship which then began has continued unabated ever since. The employees presented Mr. Smith with a handsome set of silver, consisting of a tea and coffee service with salver, together with an illuminated address.

Mr. Heinemann announces a new 'Dooley' book with the title of 'Mr. Dooley's Philosophy.' Among the variety of subjects discussed are Marriage and Politics, The Servant Girl Problem, The Future of China, The American Abroad, The Power of Gibbering Alcohol on Trust, Anglo-American Sports, The Negro Question, The American Stage, &c. The book will be illustrated by F. Opper, of Puck, and other prominent artists, and will have as a frontispiece a portrait of Dooley in colours by William Nicholson.

'Memoirs of Edward Hare, C.S.I., late Inspector-General of Hospitals, Bengal,' by Edward Hare, Major I.M.S., with portrait in photogravure and other illustrations, will be published by Mr. Grant Richards on the 27th. Edward Hare originally went out to the East as an assistant-surgeon in the East India Company's service. He served through the Afghan War of 1840–42, he was present throughout the whole of the siege of Delhi in 1857, and he served in the second Burmese war of 1852. It was owing to experiments he carried out that quinine was recognised as essential to the successful treatment of malarial fevers.

There was a time when Joaquin Miller was a name to conjure with, but though that picturesque writer continues to produce good work his vogue has not been maintained. He has just completed a new volume, which is to be published under the title of 'True Bear Stories,' and is said to contain some of the best writing that has ever come from Mr. Miller's pen.

A new volume of stories by Mr. Stephen Crane is in the hands of Messrs. Harper & Brothers. The date of the publication is a little uncertain as the book may possibly be held over until after Christmas—otherwise it will be published almost at once.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish almost immediately a novel by Mrs. H. Sant Lanyon bearing the curious title 'Sarah P.G.' 'P.G.' stands for 'paying guest,' and the story deals with the adventures of a very young orphan girl, who, being left alone in the world, advertises in the most fashionable newspapers for a lady 'chaperone.'

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are about to publish a new novel by Annie Swan, entitled 'An American Woman.' It is the story of a girl who unexpectedly inherits a large fortune, and decides to enter English society under an assumed name. We seem to have heard of something like this before.

'The Blue Diamond' is the title of a new novel by Mrs. L. T. Meade, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

Mr. John Murray will shortly publish a School Reader conceived on somewhat novel lines. The extracts are arranged in sections comprising 'The English Colonies up to 1800,' 'Australia,' 'India,' 'South Africa,' &c., and the story of these periods of British history is told by the actual explorers, navigators, colonists and statesmen who were instrumental in the expansion of England at the time. The selections range from the works of Sir Walter Raleigh to the speeches of Lord Beaconsfield, and include yet more modern authorities. There will be a literary introduction, weaving the threads together, and the extracts will be supplied with biographical and historical notes. The volume, which has been compiled and edited by Elizabeth Lee, is entitled 'The Growth of Greater Britain.'

A foreigner who has an intimate knowledge of the organisation and strength of European armies generally is about to give us his opinions of British Army reform. This is Theodor von Sosnosky. His work, which is to be entitled 'England's Danger,' will be published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

Mrs. W. K. Clifford's play, 'The Likeness of the Night,' will be published by Messrs. A. & C. Black next week. We understand that Mrs. Clifford has written a preface; it will be curious to see whether she makes any reference to the recent correspondence.

Mr. John Long has ready for immediate publication a novel, entitled 'Friendship and Folly,' by an American writer, Maria Louise Pool. The story is one of modern life.

Messrs. Hachette & Co. are preparing a French translation of Lord Rosebery's work on Napoleon.

'A Century of our Sea Story,' a work by Walter Jeffery, dealing with ships at the beginning of the century, seaports, and dockyards, officers and seamen, naval engagements, the growth of our sea carrying, and allied subjects, which has already been mentioned in this column, will be shortly published by Mr. John Murray. It will contain a photogravure frontispiece of Lord Nelson.

A third edition of Ouida's volume of 'Critical Studies' will be issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

'Gardening Year Book for 1901' is now in the press, and will be published by Messrs. W. H. & L. Collingridge, 148 and 149 Aldersgate Street, E.C., during the last week of the present month.

A meeting of the supporters of Bro. Horace Brooks Marshall, J.P., D.L., in his candidature for the Grand Treasurership of the Freemasons, will be held at Mark Masons' Hall on Thursday, the 22nd, when the Right Hon. the Earl of Halsbury will take the chair at 5.30 P.M.

Mr. Tom Gallon's new novel, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are publishing, is called 'A Rogue in Love.' The story may be described as humorously fanciful, and has a distinct Dickensian flavour about it. Miss Mary Angela Dickens, who will be remembered for her books 'On the Edge of a Precipice' and 'Against the Tide,' has recently completed a new novel under the title of 'The Wastrel,' which the same firm will publish immediately.

The monograph on Cameos by Mr. Cyril Davenport which has been in preparation for some time will be published next week by Messrs. Seeley & Co., in a special number of the Portfolio. It will contain reproductions of fifty-five examples, of which twelve are reproduced in colour, including the famous chalcedony vase bequeathed to the British Museum by Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild.

The new edition of Mrs. Henry Adys' biography of Henrietta, Duchess of Orleans, entitled 'Madame,' contains a letter of Charles I. on the birth of his 'youngest and prettiest daughter,' written on the day of the battle at Cropredy Bridge, which has only lately been brought to light. It contains three more portraits than the first edition, and is published at less than half the price.

'Clothes and the Man, Hints on the Wearing and Caring of Clothes,' is the title of a work by 'The Major,' which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on the 27th. On the same date will be published a translation of M. Edmond Scherer's 'What is Catholicism?' The book contains an introduction by the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A., D.D. 'Never,' says Dr. Horton, 'was the case of the truth-seeker stated against Roman claims with more temper, with more candour, or with more convincing logic.'

A new periodical has made its appearance on the other side of the Atlantic, under the title of 'Good Cheer.' It is described as a Monthly Magazine for Cheerful Thinkers, is edited by Nixon Waterman, and published by Messrs. Forbes and Co., of Boston and Chicago. As we have a great appreciation of anything that will make the world brighter and merrier, we heartily welcome the newcomer.

'In Birdland with Field-glass and Camera,' by Oliver G. Pike, the chief feature of which is the photographs of birds in their nests, has run through its first edition, and Mr. Fisher Unwin will issue a second edition next week.

By the courtesy of the Company of the Butterfly, 2 Hinde Street, Manchester Square, which has hitherto devoted itself entirely to the works of Mr. Whistler, an exhibition of Mr. William Nicholson's works will shortly be held. All those interested in Mr. Nicholson's work will no doubt welcome this opportunity of seeing a really representative exhibition of his recent pastels.

The part that Canadian soldiers have taken in the South African War will shortly be told in a volume that Mr. Fisher Unwin is to publish. The author is Mr. W. Sanford Evans.

The annual meeting of the Society of Public Librarians was held at the Bishopsgate Institute on Wednesday evening, November 7. There was a good attendance, and three new members were elected. The following are the officers for the ensuing year: Mr. Z. Moon, chairman; Mr. W. C. Plant, vice-chairman; Mr. H. S. Newland, hon treasurer; and Mr. C. W. F. Goss, hon. secretary.

There will shortly be published by Messrs. Hood, Douglas & Howard, of Clifford's Inn, a book entitled, 'China and its Mysteries,' by Mr. Alfred Stead. Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, has contributed an introduction.

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. are publishing a volume which has been compiled by Miss Helena Swan on 'Girls' Christian Names.' The most popular name in this country, it would seem, is Mary.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

One of the most remarkable signs of the times is the rapid growth of municipal socialism, of which as yet the chief object lessons are afforded by the three great cities, New York, Paris, and London, the first named being the largest spender of public money. The work of our own London County Council, however, has not unnaturally attracted very general attention on the Continent, and the well-known firm J. G. Cotta, Stuttgart, announces 'Der Londoner Grafschaftsrath: ein Beitrag zur städtischen Sozialreform,' by Dr. Ludwig Sinzheimer, in two volumes. The first volume, bearing the sub-title 'The Closing Period of Middle-class rule in London's Municipal Government,' will appear, not inopportunely, soon after the election of Greater London's new governing body. The same firm announces another work of interest for English readers in 'Ein Jahr in England,' by L. Kellner, who describes show-places, clubs, and personages he saw and his experiences during a year of student life in this country. The firm has also nearly ready 'Franz,' a new story by Adolf Wildbrandt; and 'Thom's friert' (Poor Tom's a-cold), a romance of contemporary life by Carl Worms. L. Staackmann, Leipzig, will publish a new tale of society life in Berlin from the master-hand of Friedrich Spielhagen, entitled 'Frei geboren.'

Yet another contribution to the history of Prussia during the third quarter of the dying century is given by E. S. Mittler & Sohn Berlin, in 'Denkwürdigkeiten des Ministers Otto Freiherr von Manteuffel,' edited by Heinrich von Poschinger, of which the first volume comprising the eventful years of revolution, 1848 to 1851, was published last week on the fifty-second anniversary of the appointment of the Brandenburg-Manteuffel ministry, a step which plainly indicated that Prussia had broken with the revolutionary party. In that ministry Baron Manteuffel, like Lord Salisbury in his three ministries until the other day, occupied the post of Foreign Minister as well as of Premier. The editor has had at his disposal Manteuffel's private correspondence and literary remains, access to which had previously been refused to many historians, notably to Heinrich von Sybel, the historian of the German Empire. This correspondence includes letters of King Frederick William IV. and his brother the Prince of Prussia, afterwards Emperor William I. The Manteuffel Memoirs will form three volumes, the second to be ready before Christmas and the third next February.

Dr. Heinrich Bruck, Bishop of Mainz, who has been for some time engaged on a history of the Catholic Church in the nineteenth century, has decided to issue as a distinct work that portion treating of the famous Kulturkamp and the dispute about school legislation. The work will be published by Franz Kirchheim, Mainz, with the title 'Die Culturkampfbewegung in Deutschland (1872–1900),' and form two volumes to be issued in parts and completed about the end of 1901.

Peter Rosegger, whose tales of peasant life in the Tyrol entitle him to be called the Austrian William Carleton, has momentarily abandoned story-telling to write a popular book on the religious problems which agitate so many minds at the present time. It is called 'Mein Himmelreich': confessions, avowals, and experiences of the religious life. L. Staackmann, Leipzig, is its publisher.

An article on Thackeray is contributed to the Revue de Paris by Mme. James Darmesteter, well known to English readers by her poems written when she was still Miss Mary Robinson. Le Temps announces the forthcoming marriage of Mme. James Darmesteter, widow of the learned naturalist, with M. Émile Duclaux, Director of the Pasteur Institute, adding that the lady has made a name by her English and French poems, by a collection of stories of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, called 'Marguerites du temps passé,' by a memoir of her late husband, and by a study of Ernest Renan.

Prof. O. Harnack, writing in the Frankfurter Zeitung, gives the following account of the treatment of German subjects in the Baltic provinces of peace-loving Russia. 'The University of Dorpat has been completely divested of its German character; and, with the exception of the theological faculty, is now wholly Russian. The theological faculty is left German because a possible propaganda for Protestantism among the Russian students from a Muscovite Protestant faculty was feared. But not only is the university Russified, it has also been systematically degraded to the lowest possible scientific level. The individuals put in place of the German professors are almost without exception extremely insignificant and often disreputable personages. As for the students, numbers of imperfectly educated persons are allowed to matriculate at the University of Jurjew (Russian name for Dorpat), to whom other Russian universities are closed. The university is but little frequented by the better classes in Russia, and the Germans of the Baltic provinces either go to the universities of Germany or to St. Petersburg, were there is more scientific life than in Dorpat.'

Mémorial de la Librairie Française, commenting on the success of the principle of net books in this country, says: 'The time does not seem remote when there will no longer be any discount allowed on books to the English public. This is an example by which the French book trade might profit, to the benefit of the whole body.'

M. Henri Avenel, who was charged by M. Millerand, Minister of Commerce, to draw up a report on the history of the French Press since 1789, has written a most conscientious work, which is a valuable contribution to the history of the moribund century. 'Histoire de la Presse Française depuis 1789 jusqu'à nos jours,' par Henri Avenel, forms a volume of about 900 pages, embellished with 250 portraits and 60 reproductions in facsimile of ancient and modern newspapers, and is published by E. Flammarion.

'Les Ecrivains et les Mœurs: notes, essais, et figurines,' by Henry Bordeaux, published by Librairie Plon, contains a series of essays and sketches of French writers, such as Alphonse Daudet, Coppée, Loti, Bourget, &c., and shows their influence on the tendency of French literature, manners, and life. The same firm publishes 'La Demi République,' a volume of notes and reflections on the political condition of France, by C. Léouzon Le Duc. Although not favourable to the existing form of government in France, and opposed to the Waldeck-Rousseau ministry, the work is full of matter of public interest, and is likely to attract much notice.

Ill-health obliged Madame Adam (Juliette Lamber) to relinquish some months ago the editorship of the Nouvelle Revue, so ably directed by her during twenty years; but, finding it impossible to lead an idle life, she has resolved to continue her 'Lettres sur la Politique extérieure' as a separate publication under the title 'Parole française à l'Étranger,' which will appear in numbers of thirty-two pages 16mo. on the 7th and 21st of every month, beginning October 21.

'Lettres à Françoise' is the title of a series of articles begun in Le Temps of October 3 by M. Marcel Prévost, which will pass in review current events, and furnish an interesting contribution to the engrossing subject of contemporary female education in France. When completed these letters from an uncle to a niece promise to be as attractive as many a novel.

Among the papers of the regretted poet J. Victor von Scheffel, author of the famous poem 'Trompeter von Säkkingen,' has been found a manuscript entitled 'Gedenkbuch über stattgehabte Einlagerung auf Castell Toblino,' written in Scheffel's own peculiar style. It will be published in November by Adolf Bouz & Co., of Stuttgart.

Another but still living poet, Julius Wolff, author of the 'Landsknecht von Cochem' and other well known stories in verse, has written 'Der fahrende Schüler,' a poetical romance of German travelling student life at the beginning of the fifteenth century. The plot is full of interest, and there are plenty of adventurous incidents and love passages in the poem, which contains many jovial student songs, and two lieder of Walther von der Vogelweide done into Modern High German. The volume will be published in a few weeks by G. Grote'sche, Verlagsbuchhandlung, Berlin.

Carmen Sylva, whose pen has for years remained unused for poetical composition, has completed a new volume of poems, entitled 'Thau.' This, and 'Seelengespräche,' a volume of sermons which the Queen of Roumania has written for her mother, the Princess of Wied, are announced by Emil Strauss, Bonn. The same publisher has ready a volume of poems by Elsbeth Krukenberg, called 'Frieden'; and a volume of Anacreontic verses by Emil Rittenshaus, bearing the title 'Am Rhein und beim Wein.'

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. Thomas Arnold.

The death is announced this week of Mr. Thomas Arnold, second son of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, and father of Mrs. Humphry Ward. Born in 1823, he was educated at Winchester, Rugby, and Oxford. Among his friends at Rugby were Wilberforce, Stanley, the Lushingtons, Baron Bunsen and Tom Hughes. Mr. Arnold delighted in his visits to the Lake District, and had many pleasant reminiscences of Wordsworth, Southey, and Hartley Coleridge. He went up to Oxford in 1841, and his great friend was Arthur Hugh Clough, and among his other contemporaries were Jowett, Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Chichester Fortescue, and J. Sharp. He was for a short time a private writer in the Colonial Office, but he very soon went to New Zealand, and there and in Australia he had many experiences as a school inspector and otherwise. His eldest child (now Mrs. Humphry Ward) was born in Tasmania. In 1852 he was received into the Church of Rome at Hobart Town, and was compelled to give up his inspectorship. On returning to England he obtained employment as a tutor under Cardinal Newman, both at Dublin and Oscott, and subsequently, on the foundation of the Royal University of Ireland, renewed a former connection with the Catholic University College as a Fellow of the University, finally taking up his residence permanently in the Irish capital. A short time ago Mr. Arnold published his autobiography. As a writer he lacked the charm of his brother, Matthew Arnold.

ON THE MANUFACTURE OF BOOKS.

BY

JOSEPH SHAYLOR.

Are the Americans surpassing us in the manufacture of books? This is, no doubt, a question which frequently presents itself to those who are in the habit of handling the books produced in that country. It is with regret one has to acknowledge that in many cases the get-up of a book in this country does not compare favourably with those produced in America. I have therefore ventured, with considerable diffidence, to draw attention to the unsatisfactory condition which exists in the manufacture of books in the hope that the reputation for sound high-class workmanship which this country has held for so many years may thus be stimulated, and that the condition to which it is my object to draw attention may soon become a thing of the past. Judging from personal observation and experience, I have no hesitation in stating that a large number of the books in general literature issued by American publishers are both typographically and in their bindings far and away superior to those of the same character produced in this country, while something approaching to a dead level or stagnation has been to a great extent the rule here. Many of the books recently produced in this country are lacking in style and originality; the page is wanting in elegance, the paper is wanting in that finish for which American books are justly celebrated, the binding lacks design and indeed is frequently quite out of harmony with the nature of the contents, while the illustrations have little or no artistic merit and are devoid of both force and power. Why should this be so? It is not that we are unable to produce a well got-up book, but rather that we appear to be too much in a hurry in their production and fail to give the various details sufficient consideration; we also appear to adhere too closely to particular fashions in printing, paper, and bindings. It not unfrequently occurs that a publisher achieves a success with a book in some particular size or style, the result of which is that it is immediately copied by other publishers and for months we have little change in this character of book. Occasionally it may take the form of a fancy ribbed cloth, at another time picture covers, again it changes into partly gilt sides and back, then into full gilt, whichever may be in vogue; the same remarks are alike applicable to the paper and printing. There is much to be said in favour of the contention that competition is at the bottom of this want of originality and that the order of the day is cheapness, but I would suggest that there is a question to be considered in connection with the manufacture of a book as well as the matter of pounds, shillings, and pence. Undoubtedly cheapness has much to do with the question; there must be books for the million, and probably in no country are cheap books better produced than by some of the publishers here. Of course there are publishers who seem unable to produce a decent book at a low price, but I fear that imitation means cheapness in production, and in some cases publishers prefer to copy rather than pay for original designs. I am also thinking, of our classics and standard books—in fact, the book that lasts, of those we gladly pick up in our occasional spare moments and always lay aside with regret, of which every lover of English literature is proud. It is these that are frequently neglected, or else not extensively produced in the style they deserve.

True, some of our publishers have produced many of our classics in a dainty and tasteful style; but what I should like to see is a healthy competition in the production of this class of book, turned out in such a dilettante style and of such a dainty and artistic character as would compel the bookseller to stock and the public to buy.

There are publishers who have a reputation for works of travel and biography, and this reputation is generally well sustained. But in these there is little variation, the illustrations are often meagre, and it is not always that the entire book is produced in this country. Some of our fiction is well printed and bound, but lacks that variety of style which we find so general in America. On the other hand, some of the fiction issued does not deserve to be called 'a book.'

We occasionally hear that the 6*s*. novel is doomed, but for the large number of works of fiction published there appears to be no other price that will bring an adequate return to the various agencies that are interested, from the author downwards. I am sure there is nothing yet in sight to take its place; and if publishers can persuade authors to be somewhat less exorbitant in their demands for big royalties, and will put a little more into its production, the 6*s*. novel will last long past the present generation.

There is still a large public that does not object to pay a good price for an article, but they like value for money. Take some of the books issued in America by Messrs. Putnam's Sons, such as Marion Harland's 'Where Ghosts Walk,' and the same author's series of Literary Hearthstones, Myrtle Reed's 'Love Letters of a Musician,' with many others from the same publishers, how tastefully they are produced, how perfect they appear in every factor that goes to the making of a book! Again, compare many of the artistic productions of F. A. Stokes & Co., Mosher & Co., H. T. Coates & Co., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and the books for the young issued by C. Scribner & Sons. They show, I think, that these publishers have a commendable pride in their business, and aim at producing books which will not only be a credit to themselves as publishers, but show a literary and artistic taste in harmony with the historic associations of book-making.

One of the most important factors in book producing is the illustrations, and in the department of black-and-white there appears to be a great dearth of artists. Many of the illustrations of our higher class books come from France or Germany, and where can we show such an original draughtsman as Charles Dana Gibson? There is, I venture to assert, a wide field open in this branch of book production; but the artist must have ideas, not a mere copyist, and know how to carry these ideas out in an artistic and original manner.

I fully recognise the various works on the Fine Arts issued by Mr. W. Heinemann, Messrs. G. Bell & Sons, and others; but many of the illustrations used in their books are, as before stated, produced abroad. One cannot be neglectful of the daintily produced books issued by Messrs. Dent & Co. and Messrs Methuen & Co., or the choice selections in Messrs. Gay & Bird's series of Bibelots, Messrs. Nelson & Son's delightful reprints of Thackeray and Dickens, and the beautifully printed books from the Kelmscott, the Vale, the Essex, and other private presses; but they are as a mere drop in the bucket among the many books, both ancient and modern, which are worthy of production in a style that would commend itself to the book-lover.

We have recently heard much of the depression in trade, and a great lamentation over the excessive output in fiction, also that the public are ceasing to buy books. May this not be attributable in a measure to the want of adapting ourselves to some of the suggestions which I have ventured to enumerate? If books are not produced which will attract a public fond of novelties, there must of necessity be a depression in sales; still I cannot help thinking if due regard is given by publishers to make both the inside and outside dainty and artistic, as well as of literary value, there would be a corresponding demand on the part of the distributor and of the book-buying public.

When looking through the lists of 'Books Wanted' the thought often occurs to me whether the collector of the future will be as anxious to procure the scarce and out-of-print books issued to-day as he is to secure the unique and beautiful productions of a past generation.

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

This Dictionary, indeed, for the first time enables us to form any reliable estimate of the special qualities of the English genius, and the precise contribution which the men and women of Great Britain have made to civilisation. Its worth can only be realised by one who has investigated it from this point of view. As I have selected the Dictionary as a convenient basis for a psychological study of the greatest English men and women, and with this object have read most of the longer articles with careful scrutiny, I am probably in a better position than most to appreciate the strong points and the weak points of this great undertaking. . . .

I estimate the number of really eminent persons included in the Dictionary as about 800. Very few of these are women. To every 100 eminent men there are only about four eminent women. As regards distribution throughout the kingdom (eliminating individuals of mixed ancestry) it is found that 74 per cent. are English, nearly 16 per cent. Scotch, 5 per cent. Irish, over 3 per cent. Welsh, and 2 per cent. Cornish. As regards the social class from which they spring (so far as the evidence allows us to determine this) we find that even when we leave out of account the large number who are sons of peers, no less than 21 per cent. still clearly belong to the small number of people who can be said to be of 'good family,' and in reality the proportion is still larger. The professional classes (often merging into the previous higher social class) claim over 41 per cent., a very large proportion, but here we are able to determine its full strength; a very extraordinary fact about the contribution of the professional classes is that, although lawyers, doctors, engineers, military and naval officers, &c., are included under this head, no fewer than half of the eminent persons furnished by these classes are the children of clergymen and ministers, who have thus exerted with marvellous effect the privilege, accorded to them at the Reformation, of adding to the genius of the country. Only 15 per cent. belong to the trading or commercial classes, though these range from bankers and manufacturers to publicans, and 6 per cent. to the farmer and yeoman class. The craftsman and artisan classes (closely allied to the trading class, but possessing a real manual training, and including weavers, smiths, millers, saddlers, &c.) are, however, responsible for 15 per cent. The unskilled workers—the great mass of the population—have furnished scarcely 2 per cent. of our eminent and ruling men. Nothing could show more clearly than these figures the peculiarly oligarchic basis on which English civilisation has been built up. It may be of interest to present these rough figures; to analyse adequately all the results which emerge from a study of the Dictionary would require far more space than I can here dispose of. I merely refer to them to show how valuable and instructive this great work becomes when intelligently used.

HAVELOCK ELLIS in the Argosy.

HOW FAMOUS AUTHORS WORK.

Though authors are rarely among the millionaires of the world the interest in them is perennial, and of late, thanks to an enterprising press, seems to be increasing. One of the points on which the public is most curious is how do they work. How are the masterpieces of literature produced—how did Shakespeare write 'Lear' or 'Othello'? We have no notion, remarks a writer in the Manchester Guardian, how he worked, what inspired him, what was the method of his composition. Did he work best, like Balzac, in long fits of seclusion, or, like Scott, in the stolen intervals of a busy and social life, or, like Burns, walking in a wood or beside a river?

Those who cannot console themselves, proceeds the writer, for the want of this knowledge may yet take some comfort in the thought that posterity will have ample stores of personal information about our contemporary writers. Perhaps, indeed, the taste for this kind of thing has gone a little too far. Literature would be a great deal the better if the present craze for prying into the minutest details of the life of those who produce it were abated. It makes no difference to literature what kind of typewriter is used by the prolific Mr. X., what the ingenious Mr. Y. eats for breakfast when he proposes to be lyrical, or what illustrious author it is who can only write with feet in hot water. There is a medium in all things, and in this matter it has been happily struck by such a work as Mr. Kitton's bibliography of Dickens, which is now completed by the issue of the second volume, dealing with 'The Minor Writings.'

Dickens was eminently an urban writer; his genius only moved freely on the streets; it is noticeable that when he takes us to the country it is commonly, as in the portion of 'Martin Chuzzlewit' that proved too much for so indefatigable a student as Mr. Andrew Lang, in order that an inconvenient character may be safely murdered to slow music. Or, as in the case of Little Nell, the country is utilised for the tapping of a reservoir of tearful pathos which no town could hold. Most of the best work of Dickens—though not all—is placed within sight of St. Paul's. Micawber is out of his element at Canterbury, and Pecksniff only becomes credible at Todger's. Thus it is highly interesting to note Mr. Kitton's statement that Dickens could not write with any facility out of London; he did much work elsewhere, indeed, but it was always with a conscious effort. When he had to write in Switzerland he sadly missed his long night walks in and about London. 'I want,' he wrote to Forster, 'a crowded street to plunge into at night.' Like Private Ortheris, he was sick for London—'sick for the sounds of 'er, and the sights of 'er, and the stinks of 'er.'

When he wanted a name for a grotesque character he walked the streets till he found it staring at him from a shop front, as Balzac found that of Z. Marcas on a famous excursion in Paris. Another feature in Dickens' method of work that may strike the writer of to-day as curious is the earnestness with which he took his creations. It has usually been so, indeed, with the greatest artists. We remember Mrs. Ritchie's account of the way in which the death-scene of Colonel Newcome was written. Thackeray began dictating it to his daughter, but before long he had to take the pen from her and send her away, to leave him alone with his sorrow. When Dumas killed the gallant and good-hearted Porthos, he did no more work that day. So Dickens writes to his biographer that he has had 'what women call a real good cry' over the end of one of his stories. It was a long time before he could bring himself to kill little Paul Dombey, and over Tiny Tim he 'wept and laughed and wept again, and excited himself in a most extraordinary manner in the composition.' One cannot imagine, and hardly wants to know, how Shakespeare felt after he had killed Lear, or written the fourth act of 'Anthony and Cleopatra.' The very greatest classics live remote in some rarefied impersonal atmosphere. But in writers like Dickens, whose flight is lower than the highest, these personal details possess an extraordinary interest and value. Dickens, it may be added, lived before the days of so-called realism, the disciples of which go about among the unsavoury holes and corners of the world notebook and pencil in hand. Such methods have produced some amazing results, but it cannot be said that the plan even when followed by a Zola has much interest. Creation must always remain a mystery—and creation alone is vital. Therefore the inner methods of great creative writers are and must remain unknown to the most intelligent man in the street.

MARK TWAIN'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT.

After an absence of five years Mark Twain has returned to America, and has been suffering severely at the hands of his proud and hospitable countrymen. He saves himself by occasionally forgetting an engagement, but henceforth even that device will be futile, inasmuch as men are told off to keep him to his appointments. The reason for this great enthusiasm is not far to seek. When Mr. Clemens left the United States five years ago it was with the avowed intention of paying the debts which he voluntarily assumed of the defunct publishing house of Charles L. Webster & Co., in which he was a partner. The amount of these has been stated as in the neighbourhood of £40,000. At the age of 60 years Mark Twain set out to make enough money by a lecturing tour around the world to pay these debts of honour. He started for Australia and New Zealand, and followed the English-speaking colonies around the Eastern continents to England. Before leaving Vancouver he made a statement in which he said: 'The law recognises no mortgage on a man's brain, and a merchant who has given up all he has may take advantage of the laws of insolvency and start free again for himself. But I am not a business man, and honour is a harder master than the law. It cannot compromise for less than 100 cents on the dollar, and its debts never outlaw.' Mr. Clemens paid every cent of his indebtedness, hence the enthusiasm of his compatriots.

FOR COLLECTORS.

The catalogue of the McKee collection, which is to be sold this month by Mr. John Anderson, junr., in New York, contains some items of considerable interest to English collectors. Among other items we note such rarities as Poe's 'Tamerlane,' 1827, 'Al Aaraaf,' 1829, and 'Poems,' 1831, first editions of Washington Irving's works, William Vaughan's 'Golden Fleece,' and George Sandys' 'Ovid Metamorphosis.' The collection also contains Robert Hayman's 'Quodlibets, Lately Come Over from New Britaniola, Old Newfoundland,' London, 1628. The author of 'Quodlibets,' who was 'sometime Governour of the Plantation' in Newfoundland, dedicates his verses to King Charles I., as 'being the first fruits of this kind that ever visited this land out of that dominion of yours.' There was a copy in the Brinley sale in 1879. Other interesting items are: 'A Little Looking Glass for the Times; or, a Brief Remembrancer for Pennsylvania, Containing Some Serious Hints, Affectionately Addressed to People of Every Rank and Station in the Province,' by G. C., printed by James Adams in Wilmington, Del., in 1764, and of excessive rarity. The works of Philip Freneau, the Revolutionary poet, classmate at the New Jersey 'Log College' in 1767 with James Madison and with Hugh H. Brackenridge, whose 'Gazette Publications,' 'Modern Chivalry,' 'Battle of Bunker Hill,' and 'Death of General Montgomery,' are also in this library. Freneau was the earliest American poet who possessed marked genius, and his different works have long been rare. Mr. McKee, says an American writer, was fortunate enough to secure his 'Voyage to Boston: a Poem,' Philadelphia, 1775; 'Poems, Written Chiefly During the Late War,' Philadelphia, 1786 (presentation copy to Colonel Jeremiah Wadsworth); 'A Journey from Philadelphia to New York, by Way of Burlington and South Amboy, by Robert Slender, stocking weaver,' Philadelphia, 1787 (of extreme rarity); and the 'Miscellaneous Works,' Philadelphia, 1788 (presented to Colonel Wadsworth).

In first editions of American authors the library is wonderfully rich. It comprises the works of Aldrich, Bryant, Drake, Halleck, Bret Harte, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Lowell, John Howard Payne, Albert Pike, Simms, Willis, Walt Whitman, and Whittier.

The section devoted to plays begins with a manuscript copy of Governor Robert Hunter's 'Androborus' (from the unique copy of the original, New York, printed by William Bradford, 1714, now in the Devonshire Library), and includes many of the chief rarities recorded in Wegelin's 'Early American Plays,' and also several not described in that interesting list. For a number of years Mr. McKee collected American plays, and in the catalogue are particulars not only of Godfrey's 'Prince of Parthia,' 1765; Tyler's 'The Contrast,' 1790; Forrest's 'The Disappointment,' 1767; and Leacock's 'Fall of British Tyranny,' 1776—plays familiar in a measure but also such rarities as Rogers's 'Ponteach, or the Savages of America,' London, 1766; Mrs. Mercy Warren's 'The Group,' Boston, 1775, and her 'Blockheads,' Boston, 1776; Dunlap's 'Father,' New York, 1789, and his 'Darby's Return'; Charlotte Lennox's 'The Sister,' London, 1769, for which Goldsmith wrote an epilogue; Murdoch's 'The Triumphs of Love,' Philadelphia, 1795, and his 'Politicians,' 1798; Mrs. Faugeres's 'Belisarius,' New York, 1795; Markoe's 'Patriot Chief,' [illegible] 1790, and John Howard Payne's 'Julia, or the Wanderer,' New York, 1806, his earliest play and his first separate publication. The section also includes the manuscripts of Payne's 'Last Duel in Spain,' 'The Two Sons-in-Law,' and 'Woman's Revenge.' These were obtained at the sale of Payne's effects in Tunis, and are the only manuscript plays of the dramatist ever offered for sale in this country. In addition, there is the original manuscript of Dunlap's 'Gambler's Fate,' played in 1828.

REVIEWS.

From J. W. Arrowsmith. – 'The Poet's Larder, and other Stories,' by Dollie Radford. A series of deftly told sketches which, light as air, delicately amuse without subjecting the mind to any serious thought. 'The Poet's Larder' is the narrative of a versifier who arranges to have an 'At Home,' but unfortunately his sister and fiancée while preparing his rooms for the event discover some photographs stowed away in the larder, and this is the cause of a serious disturbance in the poet's love affairs. The remaining contents are of similar kind.

From Messrs. Adam and Charles Black. — 'Woodstock' ('Sir Walter Scott' Continuous Readers) edited by H. Corstorphine. There is little to be said about this edition of Sir Walter Scott's work, except that it shows the same careful preparation for school use that has distinguished previous volumes of the series. The short introduction supplies all the facts in regard to the character and production of the work that are essential, and the notes at the end of the book contain a solution of all doubtful meanings, historical references, &c. There are also several illustrations.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons. – 'A History of Rhodesia, compiled from Official Sources,' by Howard Hensman. As Rhodesia is likely in coming years to occupy no unimportant place among the federated States of the British Empire, the publication of this book is excellently well timed. It was mainly conceived and written, the author tells us, before the commencement of the war; but with the object of rendering the volume as complete as possible chapters dealing with the sieges of Kimberley and Mafeking, and the movements of Colonel Plumer's Rhodesian force, have been added. First dealing with the early history of the country, Mr. Hensman next takes his readers in agreeable fashion over the events in Matabeleland which led up to the war of 1893, shows how that conflict was brought to a conclusion, and then treats of the Jameson raid. Regarding this he is plain spoken, but on the whole impartial. The effects of the Raid he considers still linger in South Africa, and are responsible for a considerable amount of the trouble that has since arisen there. Remaining portions of the book are devoted to a consideration of the Matabele Rebellion and its results, Sir Richard Martin's Inquiry, the Progress of the Country, and the question of representative government. Throughout it is extremely interesting, and the facts of history have been narrated with discriminating ability.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. — 'A Romance of the Unseen,' by M. E. Winchester. Something of the character of this novel is no doubt revealed in the title, but it is not until we have dived deeply into its pages that we come upon the actual reason and the influence of the supernatural is more markedly apparent. The story is told with some degree of vivacity and humour, and considerable originality is displayed in the delineation of character, but greater care might have been taken with the construction. On the whole it is rather an unequal piece of work, and probably is not altogether representative of the author.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co. — 'The Monk Wins,' by Edward H. Cooper. This is the story of a young girl who, under the conditions of an absurd will leaving her £40,000 a year, is compelled to maintain a stud of racehorses and to run them under her own name, the obligation only to expire when she reaches the age of twenty-five. On the foundation formed by this extraordinary bequest Mr. Cooper has constructed a very interesting story, which in the matter of romance and excitement should satisfy the most exacting of readers. 'The Monk' is the nickname given to one of the characters in the novel—though there is a real horse of that name—and how he wins is narrated in the last chapter. The malpractices of the Turf have no inconsiderable effect in fashioning the course of the narrative, and the villain is a young man who yields to the temptation of profiting by these practices. Mr. Cooper may be congratulated on having written a very engrossing story.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Mantle of Elijah,' by I. Zangwill. In the management of certain fictional puppets the author of this novel, as our readers scarcely require to be told, is ingenious. His characters perform a variety of complicated movements, indulge in witty intellectual conversation with each other, advance, retreat, bow, and smile in a way that is remarkably interesting and amusing. Moreover, each of them bears a noticeable resemblance to people we have met with in real life, though we do not remember to have run across any experience where a concentration of such cultivated beings was so strongly marked. In the present instance Mr. Zangwill's company of comedians are mostly of a political hue, and their actions take place to an agreeable accompaniment of society chatter. It is chiefly in the characters themselves, however, that the reader will find interest rather than their actions, for plot is hardly the strong point of the story, though of this there is quite sufficient to knit the portraitures pleasantly together. Probably the most engaging will be found to be Allegra Marshmont, who may in a way be entitled the heroine of the narrative, since her doings are always prominently in the foreground. She is one of the numerous daughters of a Cabinet Minister much under the dominion of a wife who will insist upon emphasising the correct pronunciation of his name and the fact of his being of more aristocratic lineage than herself—by calling him Mar-jor-i-mont. Truth to tell, Mrs. Marshmont is a little bit of a nuisance with her over-exaggerated sympathy for the feelings of animals, which benefit by a corresponding disregard for the susceptibilities of human beings, and even the vulgar outspoken Duchess of Dalesbury is welcome by comparison. The story is replete, however, with interesting personalities, and in smart pointed dialogue Mr. Zangwill has probably never done anything better. We can promise our readers much keen enjoyment in the perusal of his volume. The title of the work is perhaps a little misleading, since it implies, taken in conjunction with the character of the author's previous works, that Jewish types are largely introduced, but this is not so.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett. — 'The Dishonour of Frank Scott,' by M. Hamilton. All the difficulties encountered by the hero of this story arise from a hasty marriage. He is on a steamer bound for Bombay, and one of the other passengers is an attractive, handsome girl. The usual flirtation—apparently inevitable in the monotony of ocean life—follows. Eventually he learns that she is going out to India to marry a native. The horror of such a proceeding overcomes him and he points out the ignominy of the life she is condemning herself to. She replies that it can scarcely be worse than the existence she has left at home, and in any case the step is now irrevocable. Ultimately at the last moment he drags her from the train in which she is about to travel to meet her future husband, and the complications of the plot are founded. We can hardly say that the character of Frank Scott comes out very brilliantly, or that his easy going, careless nature, which brings about so much suffering, is particularly fascinating. Our sympathy rather turns to the poor wife and the girl to whom he was engaged before his marriage. The author, however, undoubtedly evinces an ability for describing certain phases of character, and in this respect the child 'Babs' is remarkably good, besides exercising a pleasant relief in the story.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'William Conyngham Plunket: Fourth Baron Plunket and Sixty-first Archbishop of Dublin,' by Frederick Douglas How. In many respects Mr. How possesses exceptional gifts for work of a biographical character. He has a light and facile pen, excellent discrimination in the choice of material, and a shrewd sense of the most effective method of treatment. All these good qualities he displays to the utmost in the present volume. Taking up the life of the Archbishop from its earliest years, he pleasantly recounts its chief features until the final stage is reached. Naturally he pays much attention to Baron Plunket's connection with the notable movements of his time, such as the disestablishment of the Irish Church, Prayer Book revision, Irish education, the Spanish question, the attempted consecration of the Madrid Church, the Italian Reformed Church, and so forth. He also devotes a separate chapter to the domestic life of the Archbishop. As a rule he is commendably chary of expressing opinions, and is content to let the character of his subject be discernible from his actions and the many little personal anecdotes that he relates of him. The book as a whole is exceedingly interesting, and is bound to be cordially welcomed by a large body of readers. Excellent portraits of Baron Plunket and his wife are given, and there is also—what no work of importance should be without—a full index.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Way Out,' by G. B. Burgin. On the whole we are inclined to think this is one of the best stories Mr. Burgin has yet written, and in the matter of general treatment and character portrayal it is clearly above the average run of novels of the present day. The scene of the story is placed at the little village of Four Corners in the Ottawa Valley, to which place 'Deacon' Hartopp has retreated after a stormy but exceedingly prosperous time at the Californian gold fields. During these turbulous experiences, his wife, 'goddess in chief' of the principal gambling saloon in the community, has received a bullet shot at the side of her head, which afterwards affects her brain and endowes her with the painful impression that someone has screwed an iron band round her head. The 'Deacon's' devotion to his wife under these trying circumstances, as contrasted with the general lawlessness of his nature, is well described. They have a beautiful daughter, who is compelled, owing to adverse circumstances (which scarcely seem quite adequate), to marry an Englishman for whom she has no affection, her heart being engaged to a good-looking young storekeeper in the village. The first, however, makes a sacrifice of himself, and the story, so far as the chief characters are concerned, ends prosperously. The fault of Mr. Burgin is that he forces his situations, and, in the desire to produce a good effect, neglects the necessary building up of his scaffolding. The result is that the situation often seems exaggerated and out of proportion to the alleged causes. This is not of very much consequence in touch-and-go comedy, where seriousness of treatment has to give way to the bustle required, but in a novel of higher purpose closer attention to detail is wanted. The necessity for Delia Hartopp's marriage to 'English Bill' is not altogether convincing—partially, no doubt, owing to the author's undue prolongation of the situation—and the same may be said for the renunciation of the husband at the end of the story. But both furnish good scenes, and these Mr. Burgin has plainly had in his mind, without paying much regard to the way in which they were worked up. Yet it remains true that the story is one of the brightest pieces of fiction we have yet had in a season amazingly prolific of novels.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'The Baron's Sons: a Romance of the Hungarian Revolution of 1848,' by Dr. Maurus Jókai, translated from the Hungarian by Percy Favor Bicknell. This absorbing story exhibits all the distinguishing features of the author's style, and in many respects shows him at his best. The subject he has chosen—the gallant attempt of the Hungarians to recover their constitutional rights—is admirably adapted for treatment by the maker of fiction, and Dr. Jókai has utilised his opportunities to capital advantage. In none of his works is the local colouring more effectively applied, and the endurance and self-sacrificing heroism of the nation forms a prominent feature of the narrative. Those not hitherto acquainted with Dr. Jókai's stories may be warmly advised to read this novel, and for those who have already an appreciation of the author it will furnish further evidence of his constructive skill and profound knowledge of Hungarian character. It should be remarked that the author's text has in the present instance been considerably abridged, but the work seems to have been performed by the translator in so sympathetic and discriminating a manner as almost to improve rather than detract from the value of the story.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Story of Egypt,' by W. Basil Worsfold. ('Story of the Empire' series.) All the main facts in the history of Egypt seem to have been industriously gathered together in this little volume, and within the space at his disposal the author has told his story to considerable purpose. In addition to the purely historical portion of his narrative, Mr. Worsfold has also considered in separate chapters the subjects of justice, education, and industrial progress in the Sudan, and this forms one of the most interesting portions of his work.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Woman of Death,' by Guy Boothby. A mysterious secret Society in Paris forms the ground work of Mr. Boothby's latest sensational romance. The hero of the book, Lord Middlesborough, is led to join it through the tedium of life, and certainly he has here a very effective method of dispelling his ennui. By the rules of the Society each one of its members before he be permitted to resign is compelled to fight a duel to the death with some other member, the names of the combatants—or rather their numbers, for the identity of the members is closely disguised at their meetings, even to the wearing of masks—being selected by ballot. In the duelling hall a beautiful woman presides, also masked, and she is called 'The Woman of Death.' What thrilling adventures Lord Middlesborough has in his search for excitement we are not disposed to tell, but some idea of their character may be gathered from the fact that he is eventually drawn to fight a death duel with the father of the beautiful girl whom he has only just married. Mr. Guy Boothby has again used his imaginative powers to very good purpose, and his work is made additionally attractive by some very effective illustrations.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'Peccavi,' by E. W. Hornung. We can warmly compliment Mr. Hornung on this work. During his whole career as a novelist he has done nothing more convincing and artistic. The story of the Rev. Mr. Carlton's wrong-doing and his subsequent expiation is told with a graphic force and intensity that compel the reader's earnest attention, while in numerous little touches the author shows the care and painstaking labour he has bestowed on his subject. There are two features, we think, that will ensure the success of the novel and render it a favourite with fiction lovers—first, its broad humanity, and secondly, the picture it presents of a noble, steadfast hearted man bravely fighting a crowd of vindictive opponents. Nothing so readily enlists the sympathies of the onlookers as an unequal fight gallantly maintained, and in this respect Mr. Hornung has been well advised in his choice of material. When the momentary backsliding of the clergyman has been discovered, all his erstwhile admiring parishioners desert him, and he is left without a single supporting hand, those who at one time had been foremost in their tokens of appreciation being now the readiest to denounce him. But he meets the storm like a brave and good man, and couragously endeavours to act up to his ideals. The period of persecution is exceedingly bitter, yet in the end he comes out victorious, and, reinstated in the good opinion of his friends, he performs his final act of self-sacrifice. We can conceive of no reader who, having once started on Mr. Hornung's story, will willingly relinquish it before the contents have been thoroughly explored. It constitutes a masterly study of human nature under its best and worst aspects.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'Association Football,' by Ernest Needham. The author of this little work is a well-known and distinguished exponent of the game, and his judgments and advice have all the value derivable from long practical experience. In the course of his treatise he enters thoroughly into the important questions of forwards and forward play, back and half-back play, training and captaincy, and so forth. The book should be found useful and interesting by all followers of the Association game.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Brass Bottle,' by F. Anstey. This is a piece of that delicious fooling with which previous works by the author have made readers familiar. But in his present story we think Mr. Anstey goes a little too far, and, unlike his previous works, the humour of the narrative is considerably overbalanced by its improbability. The hero being requested by a distinguished scientist, whose daughter he is enamoured of, to attend a sale of curios, is inspired to buy a queer brass bottle. When the stopper is removed from this a Jinnee appears à la 'Arabian Nights,' and in his gratitude for release proceeds to make such a mess of the hero's affairs as causes him heartily to wish his visitor at the world's end. Eventually the Jinnee, after effecting several miraculous transformations, disappearing through walls, ceilings, fireplaces, &c., turns crusty, and dooms the hero to death from the top of St. Paul's. How he escapes is certainly not the least original part of the entainment. Mr. Anstey's mistake has been in supposing that eccentricity of incident can make up for poverty of humour. In this respect 'The Brass Bottle,' though funny enough, is scarcely equal to some of his earlier efforts.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.—'Augusta, Empress of Germany,' by Clara Tschudi. Authorised Translation from the Norwegian, by E. M. Cope. To her previous studies of Marie Antoinette, the Empress Eugénie, and Napoleon's mother, the authoress has now added this interesting biography of a woman whose life, but little known, presents many features of noble conduct and suffering courageously borne. A considerable portion of the attraction in the volume rests, however, not so much on the Empress herself as on the public affairs in which she took part, and the distinguished characters with whom she was brought in contact. All these receive their due, and it may be in some cases over-measure of recognition. The book is chiefly remarkable for its pleasant readable style and manifest conscientiousness of treatment. A good word should also be said for the translator.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Long Live the King,' by Guy Boothby. Where the kingdom of Pannonia may be it is immaterial to inquire, but according to Mr. Guy Boothby there was a time when its heir quixotically took it into his head to run away from the expatriated Royal Family and to work under an assumed name as a clerk in the office of Messrs. Montezuma & Co., of Rio de Janeiro. The principal reasons for his conduct were that his younger brother had fallen in love with the beautiful Princess Ottilie, with whom also he was enamoured, and that he did not desire to be an obstacle to their happiness. In Rio he leads a pretty quiet existence until the brother hears of his whereabouts and follows him up, when he abruptly leaves the town and joins with a rascally Spaniard in a hazardous expedition, diamond hunting. The excitement of the narrative now increases. Señor Francisco Moreas attempts to play the other members of the party false, and is shot, only to re-appear later on when it is necessary to abduct the dead body of the hero in order to discover from certain marks on his person where a number of valuable diamonds have been hidden. By this time, however, the King of Pannonia is dead, the family being again restored to power, and the brother, in the absence of the rightful monarch, has been appointed Prince Regent. The country also is at war with a neighbouring State. Tidings of this reaching the exile, he at once determines to return and fight in his kingdom's service as a private soldier. He does this, and after displaying heroic conduct is killed. Such is the bare outline of a story which Mr. Boothby has treated with his customary skill and breadth of execution. If less prolific of stirring events than some of his earlier works, it shows a decided improvement in style.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S List

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE TRADE.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN has pleasure in announcing that he has just published in a CHEAP EDITION,

BROWN, V.C.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

As only a Limited Edition has been prepared, orders should be sent in without delay.

Price 6d.

A BOOK OF THE HIGHEST IMPORTANCE IN UNWIN'S LIBRARY OF LITERARY HISTORY.

A LITERARY HISTORY OF AMERICA.

By BARRETT WENDELL, Professor of English at Harvard University. With Frontispiece, 16s.

The Author endeavours to define the ways in which the native character and thought of America have diverged from those of England. Touching briefly on the 17th Century, with a special chapter on Cotton Mather, he discusses the Century at greater length, with special chapters on Jonathan Edwards, Benjamin Franklin, and the American Revolution. The 19th Century is treated in more detail, with special chapters on Brockden Brown, Irving, Cooper, Bryant, Poe, Emerson, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, and Walt Whitman.

November 23, 1900.

In the view of more than one sound critic the historical novel has in recent years been 'done to death' in England, and is now suffering grievously in America. Certainly the appreciation of this form of literature must be at a low ebb beyond the Atlantic when such a work as 'Janice Meredith' is hailed as a masterpiece and is bought to the extent of a quarter of a million copies. With us the public taste has travelled beyond the historical novel because that species of composition, as produced in these days of literary manufacture, has lost all semblance of vitality. When Scott and Dumas ruled in the plenitude of power things were different: they were different even when Lytton took up the task of vivifying the past; and since his day Blackmore and Stevenson have written. But the masters are all gone and only journeymen and apprentices remain, with the result that the British public, which has its own swift methods of judging books, has learned to pass the decayed historical novel by. The successful novel of to-day is in the main the novel of contemporary life, and, indeed, among those who essay historical fiction there is not a single writer of first-class power.

This is to be regretted, because history when treated by writers of real creative imagination becomes not only delightful but useful in an educational sense. In the opening of that glorious romance 'The Cloister and the Hearth' Charles Reade has once for all stated the possibilities of the historical novel. The passage, though familiar, is worth reproducing:

> Not a day passes over the earth but men and women of no note do great deeds, speak great words, and suffer noble sorrows. Of these obscure heroes, philosophers, and martyrs, the greater part will never be known till that hour when many that are great shall be small and the small great; but of others the world's knowledge may be said to sleep, their lives and characters lie hidden from nations in the annals that record them. The general reader cannot feel them, they are presented so curtly and coldly; they are not like breathing stories appealing to his heart, but little historic hailstones striking him but to glance off his bosom. Nor can he understand them, for epitomes are not narratives, as skeletons are not human figures. Thus records of prime truths remain a dead letter to plain folk: the writers have left so much to the imagination, and imagination is so rare a gift. Here, then, the writer of fiction may be of use to the public—as an interpreter.

Writing in the current number of the School World, Mr. C. S. Fearenside makes a plea for the use of historical fiction as an instrument of education. He thinks such historical works as those of Scott, Reade, Thackeray, and Lytton would greatly aid both teachers and pupils in seizing the past. The first point in real education is to get the scholar interested, and human nature being what it is, the novel—be it 'Quentin Durward,' 'Esmond,' or 'The Cloister and the Hearth'—is far more likely to attract the young mind than the work of sober accredited historians, however learned or able. Moreover, as Mr. Fearenside very well remarks, 'the historical novel is practically the only means by which the English schoolboy is likely to get any idea at all of European history outside Great Britain.' That being so, he argues that those placed in authority ought to see 'that among the books within reach of the boys are included historical novels, to see that these are suitable, and to encourage the boys to read them at the right times—i.e., at times when they will fit in with the work that is being done in school.' Marlborough boasted that he got all his history from Shakespeare, and we suspect that more than one historical scholar owes his real inspiration to Scott.

If, therefore, the poet and romancer have proved themselves admirable teachers, why should schools and colleges not openly 'adopt' them? We have to remember, of course, that educational authorities are ever conservative, bound by tradition, and antagonistic to new ideas. But in their own interest they are forced, sooner or later—more generally late than soon—to take an occasional step forward. Meantime it is encouraging to think that the schoolboy, if he get but half a chance, will read good historical romance for himself.

Mr. Fearenside writes admirably from the teacher's point of view. He shows how the historical novel might be utilised with excellent results to the rising generation. If he would show how it could be written with similar results, he would confer yet another benefit on the public. For the stock of historical fiction is comparatively small, and when Scott, Thackeray, Reade, Dumas, and the rest are exhausted, the schoolboy will, like Oliver Twist, ask for more. To put vapid, ill-written books into his hand would be a gross wrong. Yet little, if any, good historical fiction is being produced to-day. Will some of our real novelists not turn to this department? Despite the ill odour into which it has fallen, we think the public would welcome a stirring, virile story of the past. Were a new 'Quentin Durward' or a 'Henry Esmond' to appear, we believe its success would be instant.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Hardy, who has been silent too long, contributes a short story to the Christmas number of Harper's Magazine.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new series of small books under the general title of 'Little Biographies.' The first volume, which will be published in a few days, is 'The Life of Dante Alighieri,' by Mr. Paget Toynbee. It contains twelve illustrations.

A unique and valuable collection of works by the author of 'The Whole Duty of Man' will be sold at Messrs. Sotheby's on December 7. It includes not only what is now regarded as the genuine first edition of that celebrated work itself, 'The Whole Duty of Man'—a most rare volume—but no fewer than five first editions of other works, viz.: 'The Causes of the Decay of Christian Piety,' 'The Gentleman's Calling,' 'The Lady's Calling,' 'The Art of Contentment,' and 'The Lively Oracles given to Us.' Messrs. Sotheby will also sell on December 4 a fine copy of 'The Rogue,' by Aleman, the first edition in English (1622–23), and the very rare first edition of both parts. The First Part, with the imprint 'Printed by Edward Blount, 1622,' is extremely scarce. It is not in the British Museum, nor is it noticed by Lowndes.

For the London University Examinations of 1902 several additions are being made to the 'University Tutorial Series'; Mr. W. J. Woodhouse, Lecturer in Ancient History and Political Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews, is editing the portion of Herodotus (Book IV., Ch. 1–145) prescribed for the Intermediate Arts Examination (this is the first time that this book has been edited with English notes of an elementary character); Mr. A. H. Allcroft is engaged on Cicero's 'Second Philippic' and Mr. T. R.

Mills on Aeschylus' 'Eumenides,' both prescribed for Intermediate Arts. The publication of these three books may be expected next February. Mr. J. Thompson is editing the 'Medea' of Euripides, with a special view to the London Matriculation Examination of June 1902. This is to be ready by Easter 1901.

The demand for Mr. Robert Buchanan's well-known story, 'Father Anthony,' is increasing. Recently Mr. John Long, the publisher of the book, produced it in sixpenny form, and, although the first edition was a very heavy one, it has been necessary to reprint it no less than three times. Mr. Long has also an illustrated dearer edition of the work. In this form the book has reached a sale of 60,000 copies. It may not be generally known that the well-known drama, 'The English Rose,' written by Mr. Robert Buchanan and Mr. G. R. Sims, is founded on the story of 'Father Anthony.'

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish shortly a novel dealing with Canadian life, by F. Clifford Smith, entitled 'A Daughter of Patricians.' The story treats of a phase of life little known in England, and is partly founded on a curious marriage law which is being much discussed in Canada just now. The book will be illustrated.

The Lady Helen Craven, who is already known as an author, has written a novel which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are publishing under the title of 'The Outcast Emperor.' The central figure in the story is the young Emperor of Cathay.

Scribner's Magazine promises an exceptionally bright and entertaining programme for its Christmas number. There are to be short stories by Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Frank Stockton, Henry Van Dyke, Ernest Seton-Thompson, and others. A feature of the issue will also be a series of reproductions in colour of some of the better known pictures of the eminent painter Puvis de Chavannes. They accompany an essay on the French artist by John La Farge. It seems a little late to criticise the work of George Eliot, but no doubt Mr. W. C. Brownell, who has prepared a paper on this subject, will find something new to say. Finally, the number will be enclosed in an illuminated cover specially designed by Maxfield Parrish, and it will have a frontispiece in colour by Jessie Willcox Smith.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a sumptuous edition of 'The Early Poems of Lord Tennyson,' with an introduction and notes by Mr. J. Churton Collins, and ten illustrations in photogravure by Mr. W. E. F. Britten.

With the Christmas number of the Pall Mall Magazine, which has just been issued, Lord Frederick Hamilton's editorial connection with that periodical comes to an end. It is pleasant to read in its pages the warm appreciation of his services expressed by the proprietor and those associated with the late Editor—the editorial and art departments of the magazine.

Messrs. A. & C. Black are to issue a thin paper edition of the Waverley Novels in twenty-five volumes. The first two volumes—'Waverley' and 'Guy Mannering'—will be published on December 1, and two volumes will be issued monthly thereafter until the set is complete in November 1901. Each volume of the New Pocket Edition of the 'Waverley Novels' will have a photogravure frontispiece, and will contain the late Dr. Laing's copyright notes, as well as Messrs. Black's copyright corrections and emendations obtained by careful collation with Sir Walter Scott's own interleaved copy of the novels, which has been long in their possession.

The 'Selection of German Idioms,' prepared and translated by Myra Taker under the direction of Mr. F. F. Roget and published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., differs from the similar volume, Macmillan's 'French Idioms,' in that the French idioms are explained by easy renderings in French, whereas the German are rendered in English. But the renderings give not merely an equivalent but an explanation, and idioms are classified according as they are merely figurative, figurative and colloquial, figurative and familiar, or figurative and slangy.

Professor Weekley, of University College, Nottingham, has in preparation a work to be entitled 'The Revised French Grammar,' incorporating the simplifications authorised by the recent decree of the French Minister of Public Instruction. It will be published about the middle of January by Mr. W. B. Clive, University Tutorial Press.

Mr. Fisher Unwin publishes this week 'A Literary History of America,' by Barrett Wendall, Professor of English at Harvard College. The history is an attempt to define the ways in which the nation, character, and thought of America have diverged from those of England. Touching briefly on the seventeenth century, with a special chapter on Cotton Mather, the author discusses the eighteenth century at greater length, with special chapters on Jonathan Edwards, Benjamin Franklin, and the American Revolution. The nineteenth century is treated in more detail, with special chapters on Brockden Brown, Irving, Cooper, Bryant, Poe, Emerson, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, and Walt Whitman. The chief emphasis is laid on the literature of New England and its differences from that of the mother country.

The Queen has just accepted from Mrs. Mayne Reid an advance copy of 'The Life and Adventures of Captain Mayne Reid,' which is published this week by Messrs. Greening & Co. Mrs. Mayne Reid has been assisted in writing the life of her adventurous husband by Mr. Chas. Coe.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have just ready another volume of the series of books by Imbert de Saint-Amand, dealing with the Second French Empire. It is entitled 'Napoleon III. at the Height of his Power,' and describes his Court and its remarkable influence after the Italian War, when the third Napoleon may be said to have reached his greatest eminence.

Mr. Stadling's travels in Northern Siberia will form the subject of a volume which Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. are to publish, entitled 'Through Siberia.' The editor is Dr. Guillemard, of Cambridge, who is by no means a stay-at-home himself, as his rambles in Kamschatka well testify. Much of the region traversed by Mr. Stadling was previously unexplored; and he also deals at considerable length with many interesting topics arising out of his subject, such as the ethnology of the native races, Shamanism, Russian official methods, and so forth. The work will be well illustrated.

War books are evidently not quite yet done with. In a few days Messrs. Cassell & Co. will issue a volume by Mr. A. G. Hales, composed of his letters on the South African war contributed to the Daily News. The book will be entitled 'Campaign Pictures.' The author's descriptions from the front have been remarkably spirited and interesting, and are certainly well deserving of reproduction.

A new volume of poems by Miss Cicely Fox Smith will be published early next month by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., entitled, 'Men of Men.' The previous works of this authoress have attracted appreciative notice, and in her present book she attempts a higher strain, much of the verse being inspired by brave deeds and heroic actions during time of war. Miss Fox Smith is one of the younger school of versifiers who in coming years is likely to make a name for herself.

Two other volumes intended for school use and for beginners in the subject are also to be issued by the University Tutorial Press this year: the 'Preceptors' Latin Course' and the 'Preceptors' Latin Reader.'

The same Press has in preparation a second edition of Mr. A. J. Wyatt's 'Tutorial History of English Literature,' a book which has met with a very warm reception from the press.

The changes of a garden—or rather of two gardens—from May with the iris to November with the fall of the leaf, are all chronicled by 'E. V. B.' in 'Sylvana's Letters to an Unknown Friend,' published by Messrs. Macmillan. There is discourse of other things too, of hedgehogs for example, and of mysterious sympathy between trees and certain humans, but chiefly the talk is of plants or flowers—and the talk is not too technical; it does not offer hints on pruning, it only discusses the diverse charm of growing things. One of the gardens is in the south, but the one most talked of, from which most letters are dated, lies far north in the Highlands, and some of them record sad ravages of the rain.

With its next issue the New Century Review will pass into the hands of new proprietors, and will be conducted by a new editor, Mr. Douglas Story. The new proprietors purpose to preserve the Review as a high-class monthly. From December 1 the New Century Review will be published at one shilling by Mr. John Long, 6 Chandos Street, Strand.

Four letters of Mr. Gladstone sold for from 5*s.* to 8*s.* apiece, and one of Napoleon's for £1. 14*s.* An epistle of William Cowper, the poet, went for £2. 15*s.*; a letter of Alexander Pope, £4. 6*s.*; Dr. Johnson, £4. 4*s.*; William Wordsworth, £6. 10*s.*; Thackeray, £4. 2*s.* 6*d.*; Shelley, £4. 4*s.*; and one from Lord Nelson, dated '"Victory," Gulf of Parma,' Dec. 12, 1803, with reference to the French fleet at Toulon, £10.

WHAT MAKES BOOKS SELL?

What makes certain books sell while other books of equal or greater merit are neglected? The question is asked once again by Mr. Joel Benton, and he answers that books sell when they are talked about. But this answer involves a second question, Why is a book talked about? One that is talked about must please a few persons first who are of importance enough to influence others by their remarks. Now, says Mr. Benton, if a publisher could only know who these bellwethers are whom the great flock of readers is to follow—each group having a like impressionable group below it which its opinion and perusal is to influence—he could do no better than to send them in advance any new book with which he wishes to arouse the public—which means, in other words, which he wishes to sell.

'Custom-made readers,' as they have been called, are no doubt evoked from the subconsciousness of some publisher. In a few cases, perhaps, they are the product of a publisher and a somewhat canny author combined. Either the former, thinking by himself, or the two, putting their scheming heads together, conceive what sort of a book it is that may be made to sell—not necessarily which ought to be worth selling. When the recipe thus devised, with so much of this and so many parts of that, is found to look commercially probable, the author goes to work. It is with him a matter of shekels and mechanics, with an effort, of course, to grasp such inspiration as to character, plot, and style as may drop in his pre-appointed way. Of course, his work is to be a novel, for a book of essays or poems is not to be thought of in these days.

These persons have somehow got the floor, and when it was found they had it, the 'custom-maker' of readers was sure he must bring on a similar procession of persons and the events that surround them to get the public ear. How much this all is like the stroke of that fashion artist who put not long ago that first and afterward ubiquitous single quill feather in some lady's hat! It was a bright and paying thought.

But the feather has subsided, and the present novel recipes will go with it very soon. Still, it is very hard, Mr. Benton thinks, to turn the publisher away from what he considers sure ground. And, before he does leave the two domains indicated, what a dreary lot of imitative trash will be issued—only 'fit to line portmanteaus'—and which one should require remuneration to read! It is even painful to think of the tons of puerile rubbish that a few examples of the publisher's recent successes, regarded as hopeful types to follow for commercial success, will soon be responsible for.

But real literature cannot be made in this way. The books that are to survive their generation are not to be produced by any recipe formulated beforehand. Some principle that works secretly presides over their birth. Books in everyone's mind now that have passed the one hundred thousand mark will not be heard of half a decade hence. They are only shaped for the 'custom-made' market, and permanent literature will lose nothing by their departure.

IN MEMORIAM.

Frédéric Louis Godet.

We regret to record the death, on Oct. 29 at Neuchâtel, of the widely-known professor of Protestant theology, Frédéric Louis Godet. Born at Neuchâtel in 1812, it was there he began his studies, which were continued at Bonn and completed at Berlin, whither he was recalled in 1838 to occupy the important position of tutor to the young Prince Frederick William of Prussia, who fifty years later succeeded his father the German Emperor William I. as Emperor Frederick III., and who maintained the most friendly relations with his old master until the end of his brief reign and noble life. After his term of tutorship was over Godet returned to Switzerland, where he officiated as pastor and was also for some time theological professor at the academy of Neuchâtel. As the result of a religious secession he became head of the Independent Church at Neuchâtel and also professor of the independent faculty of theology there. He retained the professorship until an advanced age and never gave up writing. His principal works, some of which have been translated into English, were 'Histoire de la Réformation et du refuge dans le pays de Neuchâtel,' his Commentaries on the Gospels of St. John and St. Luke, and also on the Epistle to the Romans and on the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

ON THE MANUFACTURE OF BOOKS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest Mr. Shaylor's article on the manufacture of books in your issue of November 17, and while I agree with him in many respects, I must disagree with him in others.

I do not consider that there are more, or even as many, well-printed books turned out in America as there are in England. In very few branches of the manufacture of books does America, in my opinion, come up to our standard, and only in magazines does America surpass us. There is unquestionably a certain foundation for the charge of monotony in the get-up of modern English books, and yet, more novel ideas, in format, type, scheme of illustration, &c. originate in England than in any other country (e.g. Mr. Unwin's 'Pseudonym,' Mr. Dent's 'Temple Classics,' &c.). This is the case, notwithstanding the fact that English publishers have great difficulty in fighting the conservative stolidity of English manufacturers, for in book-making as in every other branch of manufacture we are inclined to consider as acceptable to-day that which has seemed good in the past.* The fact remains that English paper and English type are the best in the world, and that while half the éditions de luxe that are sold in America are manufactured in England, very few books of luxury come to England from America.

Mr. Shaylor pays a graceful compliment to my fine art publications, for which I am more than grateful. He adds to it that a great many of the illustrations used by me are made abroad. I wish to tell him, however, that the best illustrations that I have ever used in my art publications are made in England—the best in photogravure and lithography, and in process. Unfortunately one meets constantly with the inability of English art printers to cope with big contracts, and is driven abroad; but, rather than go abroad for the manufacture of my books, I have had to employ five firms to print the plates of one single book. English establishments capable of turning out first-class lithographic work are similarly limited in number and capacity, so that one is frequently forced to turn to Germany for that class of work. But in this branch also the very best work is unquestionably done in England. We suffer from a want of skilled labourers in these trades, not of skilled labour and achievement.

Mr. Shaylor draws attention to certain specific houses in America with whose publications he has been specially delighted. I should like to show Mr. Shaylor a moderate priced publication of my own which seems to me to be more or less analogous with the publications he refers to. The book (the work of a writer of first-class importance, illustrated by one of the first living artists) was manufactured entirely in England, and I should like to compete with it before any competent jury against any book issued by any of the firms he mentions. It is, and will remain I fear, a joy and happiness to me, because up to the present day I have only sold four copies of it, but such as it is I consider it the best produced book I have ever issued, a book which I—in the unprofitable possession of almost the whole edition—venture to declare the equal as far as production is concerned of any modern printed book.

Believe me, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
WM. HEINEMANN.

21 Bedford Street,
London, W.C.
November 22, 1900.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with much interest Mr. Shaylor's letter in this week's PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, comparing the merits of style, &c., of publications as sent out by English and American publishing houses respectively.

An item that he does not mention which perplexes me is, why all publishers do not (as is the case with some firms) send out their cloth books (say 3*s.* 6*d.* and upwards) in printed wrappers, showing title, author, and price.

The advantage to the bookseller is great. It prevents the book from being soiled in handling, also from fading if exhibited in a window. It would, I contend, pay the publisher to do so. Frequently one does not exhibit a book in the window for the very reason that, if of a delicate colour and no wrapper, twenty-four hours' exposure to the light fades one side or back of it, and consequently one has to make a reduction on it to a customer accordingly.

The most popular selling six-shilling novel of to-day is sent out in a wrapper worse than useless, and if the bookseller wishes to keep them absolutely fresh he has to rewrap them, that sent out by the firm being so thin that when received it is in pieces.

Apologising for trespassing on your space.

Yours &c.,
Croydon. J. RAE.

BOOKS READABLE AND UNREADABLE.

In his interesting address to the members of the Scottish Historical Society, delivered in Edinburgh on Saturday last, Lord Rosebery said there were three categories into which the society's publications must be divided: readable books, books that are partly readable, and books wholly unreadable—meant only for the purpose of reference. Do not think I undervalue the category of unreadable books, he went on, because you require a great many of these unreadable books for the purpose of reference—books you will only dip into through the means of the index to find any special piece of information you are seeking. Nor do I disparage the partly readable books, though I do not put them in the superlative part of our publications. To the general reader a dip more or less profound and more or less occasional is not an unwelcome diversion. I need hardly say that as the impartial president of this society I shall give no examples of either class. As regards the third I will give a specimen, because it is the only one of our publications I have had time to read with any exactness, that book of Fountain Hall which has been so admirably edited by my friend Mr. Sheriff Crawford, which appears to me to be a model book of its kind. I do not know how far members of this society have been able to read this work with thoroughness, but I think they will feel that both for itself and for the introduction of my friend, which contains so interesting a correspondence between Sir Walter Scott and Sir Thomas Dick-Lauder, it almost deserves preservation if only for that interesting piece. To those who have read the work in extenso my recommendations will appear completely superfluous. It appears to me a model book of its kind. As regards the publications at which our society was intended to aim it is thoroughly readable. It gives you a picture of life and manners of Scottish society of that time which it will probably not be worth the while for the mere purpose of gain for any publisher to produce; therefore it is in my judgment a specimen volume of what our society should wish to produce.

After all, I sometimes ask myself in these days if there is any use for a society of this kind at all. It seems we are coming to a period when all we shall want is one book; and whether we like it or not we shall hardly be able to avoid coming to acquire that book. I need hardly say to so intelligent a meeting as this that I allude to the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' For many months, if not years, past, it has become as familiar to us as household words. It was, I believe, founded about 130 years ago. in 1771, and many of us, since we gained years of discretion, and the means to do it, have bought the editions as they came out, and discarded the editions that were superfluous; but it has never occurred to us till quite recently that it was as necessary to us as the bread we eat or the air we breathe; and yet an examination of the Press, and even of one's post-bag, convinces one that it is hardly possible in these days to exist without the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' and without any wish to disparage that work, because I say I have always religiously purchased it—and without any wish to acquire statistics of the number of people who already possess it, and who daily peruse it—I feel creeping over me the conviction that it is indispensable to life, that it supersedes all other sources of information; and in future the sine quâ non of a library will be the possession of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'

I begin to see creeping over your faces a kind of suspicion that I am trying to advertise this. I think a moment's reflection will convince you it is quite unnecessary. I open my letter-bag and I find specimens for binding the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' I open another which contains some architectural designs. which interests me extremely until I see it is a bookcase for enshrouding the 'Encyclopædia': and, weary of my correspondence, I turn to my newspapers and I find that in every column I am exhorted as my last chance in this life The sands are running out I am told, and I expect to find some serious political development; but I am told that I must take the last moment that remains to me, or else I may go down to my grave without the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' I think I am justified, gentlemen, in saying that if all this be true—and there is hardly a periodical I take up that does not invite me to this alluring purchase—if this be true I think we may look forward to the speedy end of these societies. and that this interesting work will be substituted for them, until that millennium comes.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Story of the Birds: being an Introduction to the Study of Ornithology, by Charles Dixon. No better guide to the preliminary study of bird life could be desired than this volume, and the learner who commences his researches under such pleasant auspices is heartily to be congratulated. Mr. Dixon has that exceeding love of his subject, combined with deep knowledge, which renders his account of his feathered friends, their distribution in space, means of dispersal and migrations, general habits and functions, love displays, reproduction, and so forth, highly interesting, apart from the technical information that it conveys. Within acknowledged limits it is one of the most serviceable guides to the study of ornithology that we know of, and is bound, we should think, to become popular.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Rose Island,' by W. Clark Russell. If there be any moral in Mr. Clark Russell's story it would seem to be that feminine gear is distinctly out of place on board a vessel intended for merchandise only. Rose Island, the attractive heroine of the story, falls overboard from the passenger ship 'Elenthora,' on which she is voyaging to Jamaica, and is providentially (for herself) picked up by a small schooner sailing on the starboard quarter. But from the moment of her rescue everything goes wrong on board the schooner. The captain's son, who proves to be an old playfellow, first falls in love with her, and he is speedily followed in this action by the mate, a species of half-caste, who ultimately murders the captain in the furtherance of his hideous design to obtain possession of the girl, and he takes charge of the vessel. What follows is naturally of a very exciting description, but apparently the author's ingenuity fails him when it comes to a solution of the difficulty, for the situation topples over in rather a lame fashion. The character of Rose Island is no doubt intended to be attractive, but to many readers it will seem that she is foolishly romantic and quite indifferent to the mischief she causes. We have read stories by Mr. Clark Russell that we like better, so far as construction is concerned, but in the matter of descriptive power and the portrayal of ocean effects and scenery his masterly attributes are as prominent in this volume as in previous works of fiction.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Fight' with France for North America,' by A. G. Bradley. It is quite true, as the author of this volume points out, that the history of the war with France for supremacy in North America possesses a novelty that should warmly commend it to the attention of the general reader. Moreover the details of the war present a picturesque colouring and dramatic contrast not to be excelled by any conflict in which this country has ever taken part. Mr. Bradley has evidently entered upon his subject with a keen appreciation of its interest, and much of his enthusiasm he has contrived to transmit to the reader. In the opening chapter he discusses the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, and the condition and characteristics of the British American Colonies and of Canada in 1750, and he then proceeds to a consideration of French designs against British expansion, and so to a beginning of the great struggle. The first expedition of this country, as our readers will probably remember, was completely disastrous, and eventually formal declaration of war between France and England was made, and Lord Loudon was deputed to the chief command of the British forces. How he fared in this post may be intelligently gathered from Mr. Bradley's pages. And so, after much interesting reference to Montcalm, we gradually progress to the deeds of Abercromby, Campbell of Inverawe, Amherst, Bradstreet, John Forbes, and Wolfe, with others whose names are household words in connection with the war. The later details of the campaign are also fully dealt with. Mr. Bradley, in short, has treated a subject of much interest in a way that testifies to his discrimination, accuracy, and painstaking research. The value of his work is further enhanced by a number of excellent maps.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner.—'Kathleen,' by Mrs. G. Forsyth Grant. Mrs. Grant possesses an unaffected insight into homely character and the surroundings of quiet social life which is certain to appeal to those lovers of fiction whose tastes have not been completely vitiated by the sensational and 'up-to-date' literature of the time. In Kathleen she depicts a girl of attractive appearance and naturally good attributes, whose lot is cast among people such as any of us might meet, and she pleasantly interests the reader in the heroine's progress through life. It is by no means a feverish story dealing with the deeper passions of human nature, nor one even in its own class of exceptional merit, but it has the charm of enlisting sympathy when so many novels of far greater pretensions fail. Some elimination of unnecessary detail would no doubt knit the narrative more closely together, and correspondingly tighten the hold on the reader's attention, but it is certainly an attractive story in its present form.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Slaves of Society: a Comedy in Covers,' by 'The Man who heard Something.' Excellent entertainment is afforded by this lively satire of society's ways, while here and there the narrative strikes a deeper vein. The Marchioness of Severn, the worldly aristocrat of the plot, is angling for Mr. Hammond, a wealthy plebeian, as a husband for her daughter, the outspoken Lady Victoria, who on her part is carrying on a flirtation with her cousin, Captain Mauleverer. Hammond's affections, too, are engaged elsewhere, for he has fallen in love with Belle Yorke, a very attractive music-hall star. Such briefly are the materials from which the author has constructed his thoroughly amusing story. The bulk of the narrative is made up of the Marchioness's somewhat transparent efforts to bring about the wealthy alliance, upon which she has set her heart, and the way in which she is aided and abetted in this by her spiteful and venomous 'hanger-on,' Mr. Despencer. The last is an exceedingly cleverly-drawn character—perhaps the best in the book. As the story progresses we find all the characters becoming involved in a tangle, while Despencer looks on, delightedly chuckling to himself at the mischief he has so largely been the cause of. 'The Slaves of Society' will take its place as one of the most amusing books of the season.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Eagle's Heart,' by Hamilton Garland. The personality of the hero of this story, Harold Excell, is such as readily to take hold of the reader's interest. In the first chapter his youth is described, and from this it would appear that he has one of those impetuous, untamed natures that, though frequently objectionable on close intimacy, seldom fail to inspire a wholesome respect that ofttimes grows to affection. His own father, a minister, desires that in their moments of disagreement they shall be kept apart, since there is no knowing what may not occur when two equally fiendish temperaments come in conflict. On one occasion it ended in an actual fight, Harold being choked into insensibility, while the minister's strong white hands were covered with blood, and his face bruised by blows of the boy's fists. Before very long Harold is arrested on a charge of attempted murder, and the verdict of the jury as returned by their foreman runs as follows: 'Guilty of assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, but recommended to the mercy of the judge,' and the spokesman adds on his own account, with one hand in his breeches pocket, 'Be easy on him, judge, I believe I'd done the same.' Harold is finally sentenced to a fine of one hundred dollars and six months in the county jail. These events in his early career, coupled with the remarkable individuality of the boy, are likely, we think, to awaken interest in the reader, and should they cause him to peruse the book to the end he will certainly have no cause for regret, but rather for self-congratulation that he should not have missed an exceedingly interesting story. As a study of character Mr. Garland's work will favourably compare with some of the best fiction of the year.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Poems, chiefly Sacred,' by the Right Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe. Earnest feeling and eloquent expression are manifest in almost every line of this little work, and its contents all tend to solace and comfort. Occasionally, however, the author descends to a lighter vein, as in the following quotation from the 'Studies from Life':—

> Are you a good man, So-and-So?
> Simper and answer 'Yes.'
> I myself should say you were good
> Had I to hazard a guess.
> I think you are good, though you know you are good;
> I should know you were good would you doubt it;
> For, if you be good in this faith that you're good,
> What an angel you'd make without it!

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Honor Greenleaf, or Enjoying Poor Health,' by Elizabeth Boyd Bayly. Poor health as a rule has very disastrous results on the disposition of the invalid; but where it is accepted uncomplainingly and cheerfully, the result is beautiful indeed. Miss Bayly has written a story that not only shows an intimate acquaintance with the moods and longings of invalids, but reveals much of that heroic self-sacrifice and noble determination to regard the bright side of life which constitute a really fine disposition. 'Few of the strong,' says the authoress in her preface, 'have any idea of the loneliness of ill-health. The sick live among the well, and between them there is a great gulf fixed, that even love itself cannot always cross.' To those of a meditative, religious turn of mind, there will be no lack of interest in 'Honor Greenleaf,' and its perusal should afford many lessons of self-denial, pleasantly and unobtrusively conveyed.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Low's Handbook to the Charities of London,' edition 1899–1900, edited by H. R. Dumville, B.A. The general features of this little work are so well known as hardly to need comment. The statistics and other particulars relating to the various institutions seem to have been carefully brought up to date, and where information has been received too late for insertion in the body of the book—as in the case of the death of Mr. George Holland, the well-known Whitechapel philanthropist—we notice that it has been incorporated in the preface. In this the editor gives a survey of the past year's work, and directs attention to some of the more important movements in connection with the charitable world. In one respect we are heartily at one with him. There is no call, speaking generally, for new societies. What is required is that the present existing institutions shall be adequately supported. We are far from desiring to stop all indiscriminate beneficence, but it is a fact that has often been insisted upon—that if the present amount annually given away in London were only bestowed upon deserving charities instead of being ruthlessly squandered on the unworthy street mendicant, there would be no further occasion for the urgent appeals that meet us on every hand. To those actively interested in philanthropic work, 'Low's Handbook' will prove an exceedingly useful and reliable guide.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'In the Palace of the King: a Love Story of Old Madrid,' by Francis Marion Crawford. It scarcely matters where Mr. Crawford places the scene of his novels—Italy, India, Arabia, or other country—he invariably manages to incorporate with his narrative a seductive impression of the local surroundings. So it is with this 'love story of old Madrid,' in which the author shows that he has lost none of his power to capture the interest of the reader, and by delicate character portrayal and deft construction to hold his attention to the close of the work. Once more the old adage is exemplified that the course of true love rarely runs smoothly. The attachment of Don John of Austria for the beauteous Dolores de Mendoza has its trying, even tragic, moments, for at one time he is supposed to have been killed by the father of his adored one; but eventually, after many exciting experiences, their marriage is solemnised and the lovers are happy. The story is an excellent specimen of Mr. Crawford's skill in the weaving of fiction, and it is made additionally attractive by the co-operation of Mr. Fred. Roe, who has supplied a number of highly effective illustrations.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Story of Alfred the Great,' told by Walter Hawkins and Edward Thornton Smith. We should have imagined a short life of the good King Alfred sufficiently simple scarcely to have required two manipulators in its narration; but, however this may be, the result as shown in this little volume is entirely satisfactory. Commencing with his childhood, the two authors carefully relate all the principal events in the king's career, and the interest of the letterpress is further supplemented by several excellent photographic illustrations.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'A Forest Officer; being Episodes in the Life of Jim Burns,' by Mrs. Frank Penny. This is a book that, in its dashing incidents, will warmly appeal to the lover of outside adventurous life. The episodes are often exciting in their character, and are related in a straightforward vigorous fashion that adds greatly to their interest. The Indian background to the narrative also supplies a valuable adjunct, and there is just that general air of novelty in the surroundings that is certain to catch the attention of the reader. And once caught he is certainly not likely to break away from the book until he has thoroughly exhausted its contents.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Parson Peter: a Tale of the Dart,' by Arthur H. Norway. The author seems to have imparted quite a briny flavour to this story, and, while reading his stirring account of the doings of the smugglers who play such a prominent part in the complications that arise, the mind is always conscious of the proximity of the sea and the curving, foaming waves. Parson Peter, a highly esteemed cleric, much given to cruising about by himself in a small boat, apparently quite regardless of the weather, is actually in league with the smugglers, and so is his good friend the Mayor of Dartmouth, with other personages occupying a distinguished and evidently immaculate position. But the chief interest revolves round rather a good-looking Devonshire lass, Nance Westaway, and her lover, Will Tremlett, who are also mingled up with the smuggling fraternity. Eventually, after several exciting scenes, Parson Peter sails away on a stormy sea, and, being no more heard of, is presumably drowned, while Nance and Will are united. The story is one of much breezy interest, and both characters and incidents stand out with refreshing vitality.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Man Trap,' by Sir William Magnay, Bart. It certainly cannot be pleasant for any girl to have acquired the nickname of 'The Man Trap,' but such is the fate of Eleanor Clissold, whose influence on her surroundings forms the mainspring of this story. She is also termed 'Siren,' 'Circe,' and a few other nice epithets unpleasantly indicative of the opinion held of her by the male population in her neighbourhood, who, however, never fail to prostrate themselves before her charms. As usual in such cases, the 'siren' has a selfish, unscrupulous father, who is quite agreeable to bolster up his own unsuccessful fortunes by means of his daughter, and to dispose of her to the highest bidder. There is also a mystery in the story, such as all fiction lovers are partial to, a human figure having been seen hanging outside a window of the Clissolds' house, only to fall into a ravine some two hundred feet below. The story, despite all entanglements, ends in the good old orthodox way, and Eleanor relieved from her difficulties (excepting the unscrupulous father) is left happy in the companionship of the man for whom she sincerely cares. The story is noticeable for an abundance of smart, pointed dialogue, which undoubtedly greatly conduces to its success. Several of the characters we have met before in the realms of fiction, but they are here disposed to such excellent advantage that they possess a fresh charm. Sir William Magnay has undoubtedly produced a very clever novel.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The House of Giants,' by Yorick Everett. We can heartily endorse the opinion of the author of this volume of stories that though the first, which furnishes the title for the book, is the longest, it is not, as so frequently happens in similar cases, much the best. The stories indeed are of a very average degree of merit, and the reader who simply makes test of 'The House of Giants,' and neglects the remaining contents will be doing himself a serious injustice. Their variety also forms an agreeable feature. 'The House of Giants' is the story of a man who consents to pass during a voyage from New York to this country under an assumed name, and to deliver a mysterious letter on his arrival. The giants whom he afterwards encounters are Russian detectives who are anxious to obtain certain compromising documents in the hands of a notorious spy, and from this fact all the excitement of the narrative (which is very considerable) proceeds. The stories are simply and unpretentiously related, and this in no way detracts from their interest.

New Editions.—Messrs. Smith, Elder, & Co. have issued a new and cheaper edition in red limp cloth of Sir William Magnay's novel, 'The Heiress of the Season.' The story, which was very favourably received on its first [illegible] of incident that is certain to commend itself to readers, while the vigour of its treatment forms an additional recommendation. In its new form it should meet with wide acceptance.—To their 'Library of English Classics' Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have just added Shelton's version of 'Don Quixote' in three handsome volumes. In a bibliographical note Mr. Pollard, the editor, explains that the text of 1620 has been followed 'in order to introduce the few corrections which Shelton took the trouble to make in the first part.' A useful glossary is appended. In this new form it is a delight to reread the masterpiece of Cervantes.—Messrs. Morison Brothers, Glasgow, have brought out a new edition, in paper covers, of 'George Gilfillan: Anecdotes and Reminiscences,' by the Rev. David Macrae. The little book is interesting, though it moves a smile in the reader of to-day to recall Gilfillan's attacks on Carlyle. The author of 'Sartor' survives, but few, we fancy, read Gilfillan.—Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has added to his Sixpenny series 'Brown, V.C.,' one of the best of Mr. Alexander's novels.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF [illegible] IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

HARPER & BROTHERS' Publications

Fiction

AN ANONYMOUS WORK BY A WELL-KNOWN POPULAR AUTHOR.

THE SLAVES OF SOCIETY: a Satire on Social Life and Usages. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

The Publishers beg to call special attention to this book, which, although published anonymously, is from the pen of a well-known and brilliant writer.

'It is so good, indeed, in form and style, that we are convinced the author is no new comer into the field of literature.'—GLASGOW HERALD.
'There is an abundance of smart writing in the book and some really clever sayings.'
'Cleverly conceived and smartly written.'—IRISH TIMES. LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

A NEW ROMANCE.

CHLORIS OF THE ISLAND. By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON, Author or 'The Princess Xenia,' 'The Rebel,' 'The Adventurers,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GRASSHOPPERS.'

THE INNER SHRINE. By Mrs. ALFRED SIDGWICK (Mrs. Andrew Dean). Crown 8vo. 6*s*. [Just published.
'Excellent in tone and feeling throughout, and deserves to be widely read.'—DAILY NEWS.

A BREAKER OF LAWS. By W. PETT RIDGE, Author of 'Mord Emly.' Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'A picture of the habitual criminal presented with excellent characterisation, and much humour and pathos. This is, in my judgment, Mr. Pett Ridge's best novel.'
C. K. S. in THE SPHERE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE.'

WHILOMVILLE STORIES. By STEPHEN CRANE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 5*s*.

Mr. Crane's book is another contribution to the humorous study of boy nature, inaugurated by Mark Twain's 'Tom Sawyer,' Mr. Anstey's 'Vice Versâ,' Mr. Eden Philpott's 'The Human Boy,' and Mr. Kipling's 'Stalky and Co.' Mr. Stephen Crane believed these 'Whilomville Stories' to contain his best work.

General Literature

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE SOUL OF A PEOPLE.'

PALACE TALES: Tales of Burma and the Burmese Royal Household. By H. FIELDING, Author of 'The Soul of a People,' 'Thibaw's Queen,' &c.

'Very quaint and charming, and altogether original. . . . Mr. Fielding can be witty as well as charming, and his tales of old Burmese Palace life are delightfully fresh and natural in their unforced humour.'—DAILY NEWS.

A BOOK OF SUBURBAN GARDENING.

'TWIXT TOWN AND COUNTRY. By ROMA WHITE. With Photogravure Frontispiece of the Bank of England garden. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6*s*.

'This is a gardening book of many fascinations. It is written mainly for the possessors of town and suburban gardens, and helps such to defy smoke and other drawbacks of civilisation; but even if it had no uses, the book is charming reading.'—BOOKMAN.

THE LIFE OF THE EMPEROR FREDERICK. Edited by SIDNEY WHITMAN. Demy 8vo. gilt top, with Portrait, 16*s*.

Two Charming Gift-Books.

WONDER STORIES from HERODOTUS. Retold by H. G. BODEN and W. B. D'ALMEIDA. With full-page Coloured Illustrations and Coloured Head and Tail Piece Designs by H. GRANVILLE FELL. Bound in Designed Cloth Cover. Fcp. 4to. 7*s*. 6*d*.

'A beautifully-printed book, retold in simple English. The volume is charmingly illustrated in colours, and is, on the whole, as fine a children's book as has come out this year.'—SCOTSMAN.
'A volume illustrated in the smartest style of modern art . . . affording most pleasant reading.'—IRISH TIMES.
'A distinctly desirable volume, being handsomely got up and illustrated in brilliant colours.
DAILY NEWS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE TREASURE SEEKERS.'

THE BOOK OF DRAGONS. By E. NESBIT. Illustrated by H. R. MILLAR, and decorated in Colours by H. GRANVILLE FELL. Bound in Designed Cloth Cover. Square 8vo. 5*s*.

The author of 'The Treasure Seekers' has, in this volume, written of Dragons in such a manner as cannot fail to prove of absorbing pleasure and amusement to little readers for hours together. Probably no writer of children's stories knows better how to find the way to their hearts and sympathies.

Harper's Magazine for 1901

The One Hundred and Second Volume of Harper's Magazine, beginning with the number for December 1900, opens the new century, and with it a new era of the Magazine. It will be enriched and reinforced by new enterprise, and while pursuing the same policy in its conduct that has given it character and prestige in the past, its standard will be still further advanced and its attractions increased.

In the programme for 1901 will be included Serial Novels:—

'THE RIGHT OF WAY,' by Gilbert Parker, M.P. Illustrated by LOUIS LOEB.

'THE PORTION OF LABOUR,' by Mary E. Wilkins. (Illustrated.)

A SERIAL HISTORY:

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.
By Prof. WOODROW WILSON. Very fully Illustrated.

☛ A Standard History of the United States, on lines similar to Green's 'Short History of the English People.'

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

The Times History of the War in South Africa, 1899-1900.

 This History, which has been in course of preparation for many months, will be written by several of the Special Correspondents of 'The Times' in South Africa and by other well-known authorities, and will be Edited by Mr. L. S. AMERY, Fellow of All Souls, Oxford.

The Work will be profusely Illustrated with Photogravure Portraits by the Rembrandt Intaglio Process and by Maps and Battle Plans. IT WILL BE IN FIVE ROYAL 8vo. VOLUMES (each volume equal in every respect to a work sold at a guinea), and, FOR A LIMITED PERIOD ONLY, orders will be accepted for the complete set of the five volumes at £3. 3*s.* net the set. Subscription orders can only be taken on the terms of the printed order form, which, with a detailed prospectus, can be had of Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London.

WILL UNDOUBTEDLY BE THE STANDARD HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR, AND BE TREASURED BY EVERY FAMILY INTERESTED IN THE WAR.

N.B.—VOLUME I. CAN BE HAD SEPARATELY. Price 15s. net.

'The Glasgow Herald.'

'The Times History of the War" is planned on a large scale. The first volume, which we notice to-day, takes us no further than the outbreak of hostilities, and is a thick book of 400 pages; it will be followed by four or five more, and it may be presumed that the production of these will not be unduly hurried. Such a scale will permit of great detail, and one would augur from Vol. 1 that an earnest effort will be made to preserve due proportion throughout between events to which the newspaper record has seemed necessarily to assign a uniform importance. The point of view is frankly British, but great pains have obviously been taken to do justice to the other side.'

'The Yorkshire Post.'

'Mr. Amery was in Africa during the last month before the outbreak of hostilities, and for the first nine months of their continuance. He sets an example of calm and judicial treatment. He cannot affect to have no opinions as to the rights and wrongs of the struggle. Indeed, he draws a distinction which others might usefully observe. He can make allowances for Mr. Kruger, and those who plotted for the supremacy of the Republics in South Africa.

'The develpment of the Kruger policy aiming at the supremacy of the Transvaal in South Africa is lucidly described, with the aid of some new evidence, drawn mainly from Dutch sources. We need only add that the text of this volume is freely and effectively illustrated. The whole work seems likely to be one of great and permanent value.'

'The Globe.'

'This very important work is to take the form of five volumes, each of about 400 well-filled pages, and each well equipped with maps, battle-plans, and other illustrations. . . . .

'The book before us is complete in itself, and as a history of Anglo-Boer relations from 1815 to 1900 is without a rival, either in comprehensiveness or in accuracy. It is admirably printed on light paper, is freely illustrated by portraits in photogravure and half-tone, and has a bright, solid binding, one of whose features is a reproduction in gold of the medallion of the Queen made by Mr. Emil Fuchs. To judge from this initial volume, the complete work will be of the highest interest and value, and is destined to find its way on to the shelves of all earnest students of their country's history. It is a serious and competent contribution not only to military but to national history, and, as such, deserves every success.'

'The Times.'

'The book makes us closely acquainted with the character and fortunes of the men who played a prominent part in the history of South Africa during the past thirty years.'

'The Daily Mail.'

'"The Times History of the War in South Africa," of which the first volume is published to-day, will be invaluable to soldiers and politicians if the high standard reached in the present instalment is maintained.'

'The Morning Advertiser.'

'As a standard history of our war in South Africa, and to be valued by every family interested in its origin and its progress towards a conclusion, the work of which the first volume appears to-day may have an important bearing upon our national future. We can imagine no more beneficial course of study for the youthful Briton than that which may be found within the covers of the elaborate work now in course of publication. . . . .

'In the production of this pre-eminently important work the publishers, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, have spared neither pains nor expense. The plates are numerous and good, and the "Rembrandt Intaglio" frontispiece—a portrait of Mr. Chamberlain—is in every sense excellent.'

'Morning Leader.'

'The conception of a great history of the Boer war in five volumes is certainly worthy of the enterprise and thoroughness of the Times. . . . .

'Mr. Amery's historical work is thorough and careful. He taps, moreover, many new sources of information. . . . .

'We shall deal later with other points in this interesting volume. Meantime, we cannot close even this brief notice without complimenting the Times on the externals of the book. It is well printed on thick paper, contains an admirably executed map, and a singularly interesting series of portraits, beautifully reproduced.

Among contemporary critics none has a wider, saner view of life and literature than Professor Dowden. He is of those also who write too little rather than too much; but the fact that he is sparing of his good things makes his benefactions the more welcome when they come. Within the last few weeks he has given the world two wholly dissimilar but equally admirable pieces of writing—one the Introduction to 'Romeo and Juliet' in the beautifully produced edition of Shakespeare's works which Messrs. Methuen & Co. are now bringing out; the other a volume of Essays, entitled 'Puritan and Anglican: Studies in Literature,' just published by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. Of the Introduction to 'Romeo and Juliet,' we need only say that it is entirely worthy of Professor Dowden's fame as a Shakespearean scholar and an artist in letters. Not every scholar is a stylist: not every stylist is a scholar; but Professor Dowden's work illustrates at once the value of scholarship and the charm of style. Of his competence as an interpreter of Shakespeare lovers of literature have long been aware. His Shakespeare studies are among the best in our language, and we say that remembering the interpretations of Coleridge and Mr. Swinburne, themselves great poets and therefore peculiarly qualified to speak of poetry. In this new edition of 'Romeo and Juliet' Professor Dowden explains that as editor he has introduced only two readings not previously found in editions of authority; first, he has 'placed a comma in I. ii. 32 after the words "view of"; secondly, in III. v. 43 he has inserted the hyphens in "love-lord" and "husband-friend."' In three appendices are given some passages from the Quarto of 1597, and an analysis of Brooke's 'The Tragicall Historye of Romeus and Juliet,' with quotations. The editorial notes throughout are models of clearness and compression. In fact, both in point of scholarship and of production this promises to be the best popular edition of Shakespeare now before the public.

The essays on 'Puritan and Anglican' are particularly interesting and stimulating. 'In choosing my subject,' the author explains, 'I have been influenced by two things; first, I have spoken only of writers with whom I have dwelt long and intimately; and, secondly, among such writers I have spoken only of those who move me to speak through some personal interest which I feel in the men or their work. Hence without scruple or regret I omit many great names, having been content to indulge my own likings.' And he adds that he writes not as a controversialist, but as a student of literature. Ten essays of varying length are included in the volume. The first paper treats in a Catholic spirit and with rare knowledge and insight of Puritanism and English literature; and subsequent papers are devoted to Sir Thomas Browne, Hooker, Herbert, Vaughan, Milton, Jeremy Taylor, Baxter, Bunyan, and Samuel Butler. To the literary student that is a fascinating array of names, and, in dealing with the personalities they represent Professor Dowden certainly does not disappoint. His criticism of Browne, Hooker, and Taylor seems to us especially good. Even after such critics as Coleridge, De Quincey, and Pater, Dr. Dowden has something fresh, something unique to say of the author of the 'Religio Medici.' Indeed it is not too much to aver that this new study of Browne is one of the profoundest as it is one of the clearest we possess. Browne's mental character is presented in a line: 'Contemplative charity: illuminated wonder—these were his possessions, or, rather, by these he was possessed.' That felicitous description assuredly comes of the seeing eye and the understanding heart; and none can read the essay without a quickened appreciation of the Norwich genius and scholar who was a prodigy of learning, and, with all his enlightenment, believed in witches.

Equally good is the essay on Hooker. The personality of the author of the 'Ecclesiastical Polity'—Ruskin's first master in prose, by the way—is reflected as in a glass. Herbert and Vaughan, too, are made to stand out as men, not to loom as mere dim shadows that produced verse of a certain quality; and in the study of Jeremy Taylor we seem to hear the very heart beat. Again, the analysis of Butler's character and the account of his varying fortune are done with the ease and completeness which come of long familiarity. We all know 'Hudibras,' comparatively few of us know Butler. Professor Dowden's character sketch reveals him as a man well worth our attention and sympathy. And indeed the distinguishing characteristic of Professor Dowden's book is its humanity. It is not merely the work of a literary expert well read in books: it is a gallery of portraits that at times seem to breathe for very vitality. Among all his multifarious works Professor Dowden has done nothing happier, nothing in the highest sense more successful, than these charming and bracing essays.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Murray made an excellent speech as the guest of the Authors' Club on Monday evening. One point to which he referred very briefly and modestly deserves especial mention. As the head of a great publishing house Mr. Murray has gone through thousands of interesting papers bearing on the relations of author and publisher in the past, and he was able to say he had not found in all the documents he examined 'any cause of dispute which he would be afraid to make public.' This is exactly what one familiar with the history of the house of Murray, what one familiar with the history of any of our great publishing firms would expect. All the same we are glad Mr. Murray made the statement. It is a pleasant sign of the times to find a leading publisher occupying the guest's chair at an authors' club.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will bring out almost immediately a new edition, revised and enlarged to three volumes, of 'The Golden Bough,' by Dr. J. G. Fraser. A large amount of fresh matter has been introduced.

Messrs. Macmillan are also reissuing the Border Edition of the Waverley Novels, with Introductory Essays and Notes by Mr. Andrew Lang, recently taken over from Mr. John Nimmo, with all the two hundred and fifty original etchings by eminent artists. The novels will appear at the rate of two volumes each month from January onwards.

Messrs. Putnam's Sons will publish next month a 'History of the Scotch-Irish Families in America,' by Mr. Charles A. Hanna. The interest of the subject may be imagined when we say, on the authority of the author, that people of the Scottish race, the majority born in the north of Ireland, or their children or grandchildren, formed nearly a quarter of the whole white population of the American Colonies at the outbreak of the Revolution, and that in proportion to their relative strength they took a more important part in that struggle and the leading events of American history since that time than any other race.

The little volume of 'Songs from the Book of Jaffir,' adapted (by a scholar who prefers to remain anonymous) 'from the Persian translation of Jamshid of Yezd,' will raise even further the repute of a literature which Fitzgerald has familiarised in part. Each of the three extracts which compose the book consists of a series of songs, connected in subject; and these are prefaced by a highly dramatic story of the circumstances in which the song cycle originated. Drinking songs have throughout a hidden political meaning, and what is apparently a harmless love song sung by the king's chief concubine becomes strangely significant when read as an incitement to murder addressed to the captain who stood behind the king's chair.

Among the announcements of Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. is a volume with the title 'Ephemera Critica: Plain Truths about Current Literature.' The candid critic is Mr. Churton Collins.

It is announced that the next volume in the well-known 'Goupil' series will be a memoir of Queen Anne. Such a selection would possess the interest of picturesqueness, the period being prolific in characters of interest, of which the queen was the centre figure. It would also supply abundant material for that lavish display of illustrations which forms one of the greatest attractions of the 'Goupil' series.

The first volume of the 'Times History of the War' has been published this week. From a hurried glance we are able to say that the work so far has been well done, and though the volume deals with preliminaries only, there is ample evidence that the production as a whole will be well worthy of its subject. In our next issue we shall give an extended notice of the book.

Owing to the encouraging reception given to the first of a number of popular Illustrated Guides to the Art Treasures of England, 'Gems from the Galleries Tate Gallery,' Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have ready for publication two additions to this series. One will deal with the British and Modern Schools at the National Gallery, and will contain reproductions of the works of Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Hogarth, Constable, Turner, Copley, Hoppner, Morland, &c. This guide also contains a luminous introduction upon the general objects at the National Gallery by Mr. Lionel Cust, F.S.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery.

Simultaneously Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode will publish, in the same series, under the authority of the Liverpool Corporation, an illustrated guide to the Permanent Collection of the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, edited by Mr. Charles Dyall, Curator. This gallery is notable for the large number of important modern works contained in the collection. The Guide will contain reproductions of paintings by the late Lord Leighton, Rossetti, Sir J. E. Poynter, P.R.A., the late Sir J. E. Millais, Mr. Dendy Sadler, Mr. Frank Dicksee, Professor Hubert Herkomer, and many other eminent artists of the present century.

Messrs. Macmillan publish a valuable book for students of the Divine Comedy, 'Readings on the Paradise of Dante,' by W. Warren Vernon. In these, as in his earlier volumes on the Divine Comedy, Mr. Vernon follows the plan of the old Latin Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola; he takes the text verse by verse, gives a faithful translation, and connects the narrative by a running commentary. Difficulties are explained as they arise, and the numerous footnotes supply a key to philological, literary, and historical doubts. The Bishop of Ripon contributes an eloquent introduction. Mr. Vernon's own preliminary chapters discuss a great number of controversial subjects—such as the cosmography of Dante, the classification of the spirits in Paradise, the date of the poem, and various biographical problems. In a separate chapter Dante's Itinerary through Paradise is traced by bringing together the relevant passages, and a coloured plate gives a plan of the Paradiso.

Colonel Prideaux, C.S.I., is about to issue by subscription through Mr. Frank Hollings, 7 Great Turnstile, W.C., 'The Bibliography of Coleridge,' a bibliographical list in chronological order of the publicly and privately printed works of that writer from 1798 to his death in 1834, including contributions to annuals and periodicals and other matter. It is issued uniform with the bibliographies of Ruskin, Dickens, Thackeray, Swinburne, &c., and is a great advance as regards number of items and accuracy of detail upon the Bibliography by R. H. Shepherd which appeared in Notes and Queries during May and June 1895.

On January 16 the Dundee Advertiser will enter on the second century of its existence. In view of this event a special 'Centenary Extra' has been prepared. It tells the history of the paper, and of those who from time to time have been associated with it. Many well-known names appear in this connection. From its earliest days it has laboured in the cause of Liberalism, and at the present time it remains true to its original faith.

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. are to publish a volume on 'The Industrial Revolution,' by Mr. Charles Beard, one of the founders of Ruskin House at Oxford. The book traces the gradual growth of the causes which have led to the present industrial situation, and shows the changes that have taken place in the methods of production and distribution during the past century and a-half. Incidentally it supplies an account of the advancement that has been made in mechanics and the allied industrial arts.

To the series of short biographies of public men Mr. Henry J. Drane is publishing, Mr. Edward Salmon will contribute a study of Lord Salisbury.

To Part VIII. of 'The Paris Exhibition,' the Special Series of the Art Journal, Mr. Claude Phillips contributes an important article dealing with the Spanish Pavilion, and nearly a dozen reproductions illustrate the article. The remainder of the number is devoted to reproductions of scenes in the 'Village Suisse,' and detailed descriptions of the most remarkable and skilful work in bronze, glass, wood, tin, and porcelain. There are altogether seventy-seven illustrations in the number.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce for immediate publication a new book by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, entitled 'Virgin Saints and Martyrs,' which will be illustrated.

A correspondent of the Morning Post announces that Professor Hans Meyer, of Leipzig, has just acquired a large number of hitherto unutilised Heine manuscripts and letters. The gem of this very valuable collection consists of the earliest manuscript 'Atta Troll,' embracing 200 sheets containing many corrections. There are also about 100 sheets of poems, considerable fragments of the 'Rabbi von Bacharach,' of the 'Geständnisse,' of the 'Harzreise,' 'Faust,' 'Romantischen Schule,' Lutetia,' &c.—in all some 1,500 sheets of Heine's handwriting and 1,000 sheets written by an amanuensis, but bearing Heine's corrections. Valuable light on phases of Heine's life may be gathered from the letters, numbering about 1,000, addressed to the poet by Laube, Dingelstedt, Barnhagen, Rahel, Robert Schumann, Meyerbeer, Hiller, Lewald, Count Auersperg, A. Weill, and Heine's mother, sister, and brothers.

This week Messrs. Sands & Co. publish an addition to the Sportsman's Library. It is entitled 'Sport in Europe,' and gives a collective account of the shooting, hunting, fishing, and allied sports in the different countries of the Continent, and it gives them from the individual standpoint of each writer. Each article is contributed by a representative sportsman of the country.

To a forthcoming number of the Outlook Mr. Mackenzie Bell will contribute a lyric of emotion.

Messrs. Methuen & Co. are publishing a cheaper and revised edition of 'The Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson to his Family and Friends,' edited by Mr. Sidney Colvin. This edition, which is in two volumes, has been completely revised, and contains some interesting additions, two of which are letters to Mr. George Meredith and Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

In connection with the performance of the 'Agamemnon' at Cambridge, the text has been printed side by side with Miss Anna Swanwick's translation, and is published by Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes.

Mr. Henry Frowde is about to publish an 'Anthology of French Poetry,' tenth to nineteenth centuries, translated by Henry Carrington, M.A., Dean of Bocking; a cheaper edition, revised and brought up to date, of 'The Treasury of American Sacred Song,' selected and edited by W. Garrett Horder; and a tale of Rugby in the forties, entitled 'The Three Friends,' by A. G. Butler.

The contents of the New Century Review for December—which, as already announced, is now published by Mr. John Long—include 'War as a Path to Settlement,' by Douglas Story; 'The Old Century and the New,' by Hall Caine; 'Huxley as a Philosophic Thinker,' by Hector Macpherson; 'The Waste Lands of Great Britain,' by Fraser Story; 'A Broken Boot,' by Mary E. Mann; 'Wireless Telegraphy,' by William Utley; 'Sir Arthur Sullivan,' by C. D. Baynes; 'Two Un-Jewish Jewish Plays,' by I. Zangwill; and 'The Drift of the Day,' by the Editor.

The Guild of Women-Binders won both the first and the second prizes for bookbinding at the Leeds Arts and Crafts Exhibition, now open.

Mr. G. F. McCorquodale has been appointed a trustee of the Printers' Pension Corporation.

Mr. Frank Cundall, F.S.A., Secretary of the Institute of Jamaica, has just written a small work entitled 'Studies in Jamaica History.' It deals with the discovery of the island by Columbus in 1494, its capture by the English in 1655, and the repulse of the French forty years later. Some interesting details are given of King's House, Spanish Town, the official residence of the Governor until 1870, when the seat of government was removed to Kingston; the 'Admiral's Pen' at Kingston, where, among others, Admiral Rodney at one time resided; and 'Nelson's Quarter Deck' at Port Royal, the abode of our naval hero in 1779. Accounts are also given of Raymond Hall, where Michael Scott wrote his sketches, which were afterwards worked into 'Tom Cringle's Log' and 'The Cruise of the "Midge"'; and Bryan Castle, the residence of Bryan Edwards, the Author of 'The History of the British West Indies,' published at the end of last century. Much careful research has evidently been expended on these studies, and they are likely to interest the inhabitants of Jamaica and visitors to the island. The book is illustrated with various views and buildings.

AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.

Mr. Murray at the Authors' Club.

On Monday evening Mr. John Murray was the guest at the weekly dinner of the Authors' Club, and made one of his happiest speeches. Lord Monkswell, who occupied the chair, said they had met to do honour to a distinguished publisher. Mr. Murray was a publisher, and he could not claim in mitigation of the offence that he was only a little one, for he was a great one—the head of his profession. In spite of all the temptations he would not compare publishers with authors, because his loyalty to the Authors' Club might perhaps be in conflict with the politeness due to a guest. As a member of the Authors' Club it might possibly be expected of him to say how haughtily he looked down on mere publishers, but, speaking as an individual, he must avow the respect and reverence, if not awe, with which he looked up to the great publishing house of Murray. It was a proud position to be the head of the publishers of England. He was aware that a certain amount of friction sometimes existed between certain authors and certain publishers. But there never was a publishing house more generous than the Murrays to authors in distress. John Murray, the first grandfather of their welcome guest, was a contemporary of Frederick the Great. The famous firm he founded was connected with some of the greatest names in our modern history, and John Murray the third worthily maintained the traditions of his name.

Mr. Murray, in responding, said: It is not recorded what the feelings of Daniel were on entering the lions' den, but I think we may assume them to have been of the nature of apprehension tempered with confident satisfaction. We have no reason, however, to suppose that Darius had given Daniel a six weeks' invitation into the den, and if half of what we read in the newspapers be true I ought to have been suffering the pains of unalleviated apprehension since my invitation to dinner reached me early last month.

I am happy to say, however, that I am one of those who do not believe what is written in the newspapers, and that my satisfaction in coming here has been unalloyed by any apprehension. Strange as it may seem to some of you, there is no society in which I feel so much at home as among authors.

I have heard the names of some of my predecessors in this position, and I confess that when I think of them I am overwhelmed by the sense of my own inability to bear comparison with them. You have had here men who have made brilliant excursions in regions terrestrial, military and poetical, and who have come back to tell you something new and thrilling of their experiences in the great outer world. My life is but a commonplace one compared to theirs. What adventures can the ox which treadeth out the corn have to relate? And my daily life consists merely in treading out the grain which you gentlemen have sown and reaped and gathered in many fields.

The craft to which I have the honour to belong has been called the obstetric branch of the great literary community. I have no fault to find with the simile, but I suppose that Sarah Gamp would never have gained her livelihood if she had not personally made some experiments in those toils—should I say labours?—at which she was wont to assist. In like manner I have made some efforts in authorship, but I will not further allude to these unacknowledged (I will not say illegitimate) offspring than to assure you that they have given me a keen and sympathetic interest in those 'pangs and fears' which authors have.

Your chairman has alluded to the tradition which I inherit. I can assure you with all sincerity that I am deeply conscious of it, and of the privileges and burdens which such a tradition, rightly understood, entails. It is not very easy to live up to a tradition; it closes certain branches of work which to others are perfectly legitimate if not praiseworthy. For many years I have toiled through many thousands of dusty letters and folios, and, unless I am entirely impervious to such influences, I may claim to have absorbed some of the experiences of close on 150 years, and to have learned something of the causes which have in the past led, and still lead, to disputes between authors and publishers. These causes are various and many, but I can say without hesitation that among those old documents I have found no cause whatever which I should for a moment be ashamed to tell to the world.

When I first came to London from Oxford, more intent on cricket and sport than on books, if I had had the gift of prophecy I would have foreseen that the life of a publisher is one of never ceasing toil and anxiety; that his work is never ending, still beginning; that no sooner is one task finished and laid aside than half-a-dozen others are at hand, clamorous to be taken up. I would have realised always that aliquid superest agendum which made Cæsar feel that nothing had been accomplished; I should have known, in short, that if a man strives after the 'potentiality of becoming rich beyond the dreams of avarice' he must appeal, not to the great heart of the people, not to the great head of the people, but to the great stomach of the people—beer, or pills, or soda water must claim his attention.

Warlike similes are in vogue just now: allow me to lay one before you:—

Take two men, dress one in khaki and the other in any nondescript slops which may come to hand, put rifles in their hands and place them on a kopje. They will fire away at one another till one is or both are dead. But place one of these men in a position of danger and distress—in sore straits—and let the other see him; ten to one he will risk his safety, even his life, to help him.

In like manner you take two men, one labelled 'publisher,' the other 'author,' place them on a kopjeright, and put pens in their hands, and they will fight to the death, no doubt. But beneath all these labels and dresses is the spirit of human sympathy—the man himself, who will go almost any length to meet and serve a friend in distress.

For myself, I believe that all business relations, whether literary or of any other kind, can be carried on in this spirit if men will only be frank and true in their dealings with one another.

I have said that I shrink from comparison with my predecessors in this chair; in one respect, however, I claim to be at least equal to the best of them, and that is in my appreciation of the honour you have done me in asking me to be your guest, and in the great pleasure I have had in dining with you to-night.

I thank you all most heartily.

Other speeches followed, the speakers expressing their pleasure in having a publisher as the guest of the club.

An Old Liverpool Subscription Library. What is widely known as Parry's Subscription Library, which, first started in Leece Street, has long been carried on at 97 Renshaw Street, has, we learn from the Liverpool Mercury, been purchased by Mr. Edward Howell, of 83 Church Street. Probably the oldest library in the city, and almost the first of the circulating type, it was largely patronised by the aristocracy of Liverpool in the early fifties, whilst it is authoritatively stated that Thackeray used to visit the library, and sit in a room over the shop chatting with the late Mr. Parry. The library, which contains about 40,000 volumes, including some of the rarest sporting books, is a landmark in the literary history of the city, many of the oldest people recollecting its existence when they were quite young. It includes sets of Miss Freer, Miss Pardoe, Dr. Doran, Jesse, first editions of Browning, Swinburne, Thackeray, Dickens, Borrow's 'Lavengro,' 3 vols., and other works; fine collection of books on Australia, China, India, &c.; sets of Meredith, Ainsworth, Black, Gore, Lady Fullerton, &c., &c., many in the original cloth; Cruikshankiana, coaching books, and sets of standard literature. The sale was satisfactorily arranged by Mr. H. C. Roughsedge, the executor; and Mr. Howell's library, which also includes the subscription library of Messrs. Gibbons, late of Ranelagh Street, is probably the finest outside Mudie's.

HISTORICAL NOVELS IN SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to the leading article in your issue of November 24, introducing some comments on my discussion of the educational value of 'Historical Novels' in the November number of the School World. I fear that I could not say all that I should like to say on the points raised by you in less than the space which you yourself occupied; but I would be obliged if you would permit me to say three things shortly:

(1) Are you not a little severe on the present generation of writers of such books in branding them all as 'journeymen and apprentices'?

(2) I regret that I am not qualified to take up your challenge to 'show how historical novels should be written.' But I fancy that a good many attempts are wrecked on reefs and rocks which Scott marked plainly enough on the charts that appear as prefaces to some of his own novels.

(3) Please do not accuse me of wishing 'schools and colleges' and other 'educational authorities' 'openly to adopt' the 'Historical Novel' as an instrument of education. I prefer to leave the using of the 'Historical Novel' to the initiative and discretion of the individual teacher, not to open up new fields to be exploited by perpetrators of 'School Editions of the Classics.' They have the Greek and Latin classics, Shakespeare and the major poets: let them annotate them. In my article I took some pains to express myself guardedly on this point—in fact, I threw my suggestion into the form of a question. 'Instead of which,' you, Sir, transpose my interrogative sentence into an indicative statement beginning 'those placed in authority ought,' while a writer in Literature has charged me with 'proposing a system' (as though I were a frequenter of Monte Carlo or a patron of the race tipster), and concocting a 'plot for disturbing the peace of a boy's playtime.' My appeal was not to the Board of Education nor to the Local Syndicate or Delegacy, but to the teacher; and I begged him to induce, not to prescribe, to tempt into pleasant gardens, not to condemn to a treadmill.

Yours faithfully,
C. S. Fearenside.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË, BY HER PUBLISHERS.

The second instalment of Mr. George M. Smith's most interesting reminiscences in the Cornhill Magazine is devoted to Charlotte Brontë. Mr. Smith tells how his firm came to publish the Brontë novels. 'In July 1847 (he writes) a parcel containing a MS. reached our office addressed to the firm, but bearing also the scored-out addresses of three or four other publishing houses; showing that the parcel had been previously submitted to other publishers. This was not calculated to prepossess us in favour of the MS. It was clear that we were offered what had been already rejected elsewhere.

'The parcel contained the MS. of "The Professor," by "Currer Bell," a book which was published after Charlotte Brontë's death. Mr. Williams, the "reader" to the firm, read the MS., and said that it evinced great literary power, but he had doubts as to its being successful as a publication. We decided that he should write to "Currer Bell" a letter of appreciative criticism declining the work, but expressing an opinion that he could produce a book which would command success. Before, however, our letter was despatched, there came a letter from "Currer Bell" containing a postage-stamp for our reply, it having been hinted to the writer by "an experienced friend" that publishers often refrained from answering communications unless a postage-stamp was furnished for the purpose! Charlotte Brontë herself has described the effect our letter had on her:

> As a forlorn hope, he tried one publishing house more. Ere long, in a much shorter space than that on which experience had taught him to calculate, there came a letter, which he opened in the dreary anticipation of finding two hard hopeless lines, intimating that 'Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. were not disposed to publish the MS.,' and, instead, he took out of the envelope a letter of two pages. He read it trembling. It declined, indeed, to publish that tale for business reasons, but it discussed its merits and demerits so courteously, so considerately, in a spirit so rational, with a discrimination so enlightened, that this very refusal cheered the author better than a vulgarly expressed acceptance would have done. It was added, that a work in three volumes would meet with careful attention.

The second work came. It was 'Jane Eyre,' and was read by Mr. Williams. 'He brought it to me,' Mr. Smith tells us, 'on a Saturday, and said that he would like me to read it. There were no Saturday half-holidays in those days, and, as was usual, I did not reach home until late. I had made an appointment with a friend for Sunday morning; I was to meet him about twelve o'clock, at a place some two or three miles from our house, and ride with him into the country.

'After breakfast on Sunday morning I took the MS. of "Jane Eyre" to my little study, and began to read it. The story quickly took me captive. Before twelve o'clock my horse came to the door, but I could not put the book down. I scribbled two or three lines to my friend, saying I was very sorry that circumstances had arisen to prevent my meeting him, sent the note off by my groom, and went on reading the MS. Presently the servant came to tell me that luncheon was ready; I asked him to bring me a sandwich and a glass of wine, and still went on with "Jane Eyre." Dinner came; for me the meal was a very hasty one, and before I went to bed that night I had finished reading the manuscript.

'The next day we wrote to "Currer Bell" accepting the book for publication. I need say nothing about the success which the book achieved, and the speculations as to whether it was written by a man or a woman. For my own part I never had much doubt on the subject of the writer's sex; but then I had the advantage over the general public of having the handwriting of the author before me. There were qualities of style, too, and turns of expression, which satisfied me that "Currer Bell" was a woman, an opinion in which Mr. Williams concurred. We were bound, however, to respect the writer's anonymity, and our letters continued to be addressed to "Currer Bell, Esq." Her sisters were always referred to in the correspondence as "Messrs. Ellis and Acton Bell."' Mr. Smith describes the visit of Charlotte and Anne to London. He confesses that his first impression of the author of 'Jane Eyre' was a little disappointing. In appearance she was interesting rather than attractive, and was without feminine charm—a fact of which she seems to have been rather painfully conscious herself.

Using the names of Mr. and Miss Fraser, Miss Brontë and her young publisher went to a phrenologist named Browne, and his estimate is curious. Here is the portion relating to her intellectual qualities:

> In its intellectual development this head is very remarkable. The forehead is at once very large and well formed. It bears the stamp of deep thoughtfulness and comprehensive understanding. It is highly philosophical. It exhibits the presence of an intellect at once perspicacious and perspicuous. There is much critical sagacity and fertility in devising resources in situations of difficulty, much originality, with a tendency to speculate and generalise. Possibly this speculative bias may sometimes interfere with the practical efficiency of some of her projects. Yet since she has scarcely an adequate share of self-reliance, and is not sanguine as to the success of her plans, there is reason to suppose that she would attend more closely to particulars, and thereby present the unsatisfactory results of hasty generalisation. This lady possesses a fine organ of language, and can, if she has done her talents justice by exercise, express her sentiments with clearness, precision, and force—sufficiently eloquent but not verbose. In learning a language she would investigate its spirit and structure. The character of the German language would be well adapted to such an organisation. In analysing the motives of human conduct, this lady would display originality and power, but in her mode of investigating mental science she would naturally be imbued with a metaphysical bias; she would perhaps be sceptical as to the truth of Gale's doctrine. But the study of this doctrine, this new system of mental philosophy, would give additional strength to her excellent understanding by rendering it more practical, more attractive to pupils, and contribute to her happiness by imparting to her more correct notions of the dispositions of those whose acquaintance she may wish to cultivate.

The article, which runs to some fifteen pages, is full of interest, and should not be missed by any admirer of the Brontë novels. We trust Mr. Smith will now give the world his reminiscences of Thackeray.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. George Goddard.

We record with regret the death of Mr. George Goddard, which took place unexpectedly at his residence, Courtney Road, Penge. The deceased was well known in the publishing and wholesale trade. His experience began in 1858, when he entered the employment of Messrs. Whittaker & Co., Ave Maria Lane, in whose service he remained some eight years. He then had several years' experience with Mr. W. Allan, Foreign Bookseller, Stationers' Hall Court. In 1866 he entered the service of Messrs. Edward Gardner & Sons, 7 Paternoster Row, who were then the agents for the Oxford University Press, and whose business was perhaps better known as the Oxford Bible Warehouse. After an experience of ten years in the Bible and Prayer-Book trade, he entered the service of Messrs. William Clowes & Sons, where, in the publishing department of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' he spent the remainder of his business life.

Mr. Goddard was a many-sided man, a proficient vocalist, and well versed in much that has to do with present-day life. In his business capacity he was a fund of information—known, perhaps, better to those who were his intimates. He possessed a 'wiry' constitution, and held a life's record for health.

The immediate cause of death was congestion of the lungs, coupled with pleurisy. He leaves a widow, two daughters, and one son.

ON THE MANUFACTURE OF BOOKS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—Having read Mr. Shaylor's and Mr. Heinemann's letters in your issues of Nov. 17 and 24, and handling new American books daily, we desire to express our opinion in the hope that this subject may be thoroughly discussed and may lead to beneficial results.

We cannot admit that American books are superior either in paper, print, or illustration; in fact, a great number of the better illustrated are printed upon a paper much too heavy. The only branch of book-making in which they excel is the binding. For some years they have been giving more attention to their book covers; they have introduced new makes and colours of cloth (some of which we are glad to see have reached this side), their artists are more original, and the sewing and finish of the binding is better.

Possibly the American retail trade take more kindly to a well-produced book than in this country. It is our experience, also, that however interesting a new book may be and charmingly produced, the majority of the retail trade refuse to stock it unless the author is already popular.

This compels the publisher to spend a larger sum of money in advertising the book in order to secure any sales; the result is that the expenses of production, and of binding in particular, are necessarily kept low.

We are, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
Gay & Bird.

F. Stevens).

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION.

The report read at the annual meeting of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching on Saturday last shows that the work done during the last year has been eminently satisfactory. The courses of lectures arranged numbered 162; the entries of students, 12,141; and the certificates awarded, 1,544. Courses of lectures in sequence during the session continued to form a large proportion of the whole. The work among elementary and secondary teachers has been carried on with great success. More than 100 students attended each of the courses of lectures at Gresham College; and the lectures at Polytechnics were attended in all by 1,768 students, and those in other technical institutes by 1,210 students. The Council desired to thank the Court of Common Council, the Trustees of the City Parochial Charities, the Gilchrist Trustees, the Mitchell Trustees, many City Companies, and other private donors for their generous gifts. They appealed for further liberal support of the courses of lectures in the poorer districts of London, which were a constant drain on the resources of the society. The statement of accounts showed total receipts to the amount of £5,344, of which £1,133 was made up of grants from public bodies, and £3,759 of payments from local centres. The balance in hand was £85.

The Chairman (the Rev. T. W. Sharpe), in moving the adoption of the report, said that the numbers of the society's students were steadily growing. The falling-off in the number of certificates awarded was simply due to the fact that so many students were taking the courses for the whole year, instead of merely for the term. The usefulness of the society would be greatly extended by the establishment of home-reading unions, which would prepare the pupils of the elementary schools for the University Extension classes.

Professor Sylvanus Thompson, in seconding the motion, said that in the past the University of London had had little direct relation with teaching, and that fact had been a serious blow to all higher and secondary education in London. The London Society for the Extension of University Teaching had been doing the work that any real University of London ought to have done. It was not enough that there should be university teaching in definite seats of learning. There must be the machinery for bringing that teaching to the poor student, who could not spend years in residence at a university. He wished that in every one of the new London boroughs there might be an active centre of the University Extension movement. The mark of educational progress in England during the century was that the higher education had become more distinctly the property of the people and available to all.

Mr. Churton Collins said that the great developments of the last fifty years had brought new educational needs; education had to assume new phases; and even the august universities would have to modify their methods. The degradation of literature into philology and of history into antiquities must be got rid of. The University Extension movement had been directed on the right path by the sheer necessities of the democracy, and its influence would react on the whole of education. There had been many inevitable defects in the society's work, and the great difficulty was to provide for the students who took the work very seriously indeed. Of course, local secretaries were obliged to study popularity, and those who wished to study Greek literature were few compared with those who wished to hear lectures on Tennyson or Browning. But would it not be possible to provide for the more serious students at Gresham College? The work of the society might be greatly extended by arranging for single pioneer lectures, or for a short course of four lectures, on such subjects as the best way to study poetry or the best way to study history, so as to guide the readers of the free libraries to the proper study of books.

Lord Avebury was re-elected president of the society, and Mr. Leonard Courtney a member of the council.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Jenny of the Villa,' by Mrs. C. H. Radford. The general tendency of social democracy is to create disturbance rather than allay it, and rare havoc does it cause with the happiness of the chief characters in Mrs. Radford's story. Michael Trude is of the Socialistic order, earnest, courageous, and well-meaning, but wanting in sound judgment and mental balance. Because he feels so intensely sorry for the hardships to which a girl of light character is subjected by society, he marries her, and, as usual, has cause to repent of his choice. Jenny, the heroine of the story, has by this time fallen in love with him and he returns her passion. Jenny is by way of being a bit of a Socialist herself—that is, her natural warm unselfish disposition prompts her to the exhibition of sympathy with all efforts that tend to the relief of oppressed humanity; and she regards Michael Trude and his opinions with the utmost veneration. She is even willing, since it is impossible for them to be legally married, to live with him as his wife; but Trude is man enough to prevent her making this sacrifice. Eventually Mrs. Trude dies, and then Michael forsakes Jenny, and for the sake of the 'cause' marries her cousin, Stella Greenslade, who for long has been an active worker in the spread of Socialistic principles. So poor little tender-hearted Jenny is left out in the cold, and she resolves to devote herself, as so many blighted beings have done before her, to the profession of nursing. Whether she ever rewards the devoted affection of the right lover—a manly, level-headed young fellow in every way worthy of her—we are not told, but presumably time brings about this change. There are several rather clever character sketches in the story, one being that of a young feather-brained Socialist perfectly eaten up with conceit, who believes that he is to be the regenerator of mankind, and talks accordingly. We have met such lunatics ourselves.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Fifteen Studies in Book-keeping, with a Selection of Worked and Unworked Examination Papers,' by Walter W. Snailum. The rules of book-keeping are very clearly pointed out by Mr. Snailum in this work, and the student should find the volume of excellent service in acquiring a knowledge of the subject. The author has had large experience in teaching elementary scholars, and this serves him in good stead in the practical arrangement of his book. The volume is divided into three parts, respectively devoted to an explanation of the various principles involved, a number of fully worked examination papers, and a selection of examination papers for solution by the student. As an aid to the candidate for the examinations of the College of Preceptors, the Oxford and Cambridge Local, the Civil Service, Society of Arts, and other bodies, it can scarcely be over-commended.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company.—'The Tale of a Field Hospital,' by Frederick Treves. In this little tastefully printed and bound volume the author gives an interesting account of the work and experiences of a field hospital with the Ladysmith Relief Column from the time that column left Frere until it entered the besieged town. At a time when the medical service at the front is arousing so much unfavourable comment, this little work, which in its perfect unaffectedness conveys every impression of extreme truth, is undoubtedly welcome. The attractions of the letterpress are intensified by some excellent illustrations taken from photographs. As far as these go, there do not seem to be many signs of war, and some of the pictures are almost sylvan in their [illegible] For we are reminded that photographs can only be taken in times of [illegible] and we are almost thankful for an omission of the horrors. The book in [illegible] enough in itself.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus. 'The Adventures of Tyler Tatlock, Private Detective,' related by Dick Donovan. The exploits of Mr. Tatlock may have been very clever, but we must confess they have not greatly impressed us in this volume. There is a lack of artistic finish about them, a crudity of detail, that detracts very considerably from their effect. The telling of detective stories evidently begins to pall upon Mr. Donovan, or else his fertility of invention is becoming played out. The 'adventures,' we should imagine, have been written hurriedly, and without due consideration to the building up of their framework. The capabilities of Tyler Tatlock in the matter of disguise, grasp of the situation, and intuitive knowledge of cause appear to have been wonderful, but extraordinary good fortune seems also to have acted as a powerful factor in his success, and we are afraid the reader will lose interest because the purely mechanical side of the plot is so extremely prominent as to render the stories unconvincing. A little more freedom of narration and attention to style would have relieved this. But we are far from saying that the book is without attraction, and we have no doubt that by the more undiscriminating portion of readers it will be greatly appreciated. Only it is not quite worthy of Mr. Donovan.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'War and Policy,' by Spenser Wilkinson. The interest of the author in his subject is very manifest in these essays. As he himself tells us in the preface, he was brought up to revere the school of Liberalism of which John Bright was the foremost exponent, but many years' study showed him that it took a false and distorted view of life, and 'regarded the exertion of force in support of right not as something that might be necessary and for which the nation ought to be prepared, but as something altogether wrong.' He had therefore to go back to first beginnings, and to work out his course of thought anew. 'The essays here collected represent a portion of ten years' work in the search of, and the application of, principles which might serve as guides in the conduct of British national and Imperial affairs.' They are grouped under the respective headings of Military History, The Art of War, Problems of Policy, National Defence, and the South African War. Each reveals an earnestness of study that can scarcely fail to be of effect in increasing the knowledge and interest of the reader, and that should greatly enhance Mr. Wilkinson's already high reputation. There are many glib critics of the present war in South Africa; to them we especially commend a perusal of these pages as likely to supply them with a knowledge of the ethics of warfare, which apparently they do not possess. But to all reflective minds the book can scarcely fail to be of the greatest interest, and its practical value is considerably enhanced by the presence of several sketch maps.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Kate Cameron of Brux; or, the Feud: a Story of Wild Doings and Strange People based upon Legends and Traditions Current in the Locality in which the Scenes are Laid,' by J. E. Muddock. There is a vigorous directness in Mr. Muddock's novels that, despite misgivings as to occasional deficiencies of construction and style, thoroughly excites the interest of the reader. So it is with his present work—though not perhaps to the extent shown by previous stories—and in the society of a very genial, robust companion we follow his narrative to the concluding chapter. Other readers are likely to fall under a similar fascination, and we can promise them much pleasure in perusing Mr. Muddock's work. Though perhaps not equal to some of his earlier productions, it has attractions of incident, character, and general surroundings that are certain to render it deservedly popular with the reading world.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Problems of Evolution,' by W. F. Headley. The subject of evolution is one of the most absorbing to which the present-day student can direct his attention, and though much has already been penned on the topic its consideration by fresh writers imbued with a thorough appreciation of its attractions invariably awakens new interest. So it is with Mr. Headley's volume. Perhaps in itself it reveals no particularly original ideas, but there is always a pleasure to be derived from studying the views of another observer even when he agrees in his conclusions with ourselves, since there is sure to be something interesting in his own individual survey of the situation. Mr. Headley's work is divided into two parts. In an introductory chapter he deals with some of the more elementary facts of biology, in order that the reader, thus equipped, may be able to understand what follows. He then concisely traverses the subject of heredity, variation, and death, the Lamarckian principle, natural selection, sexual selection, and isolation. The second part of the book deals more directly with the problems of evolution, and under the general headings of physical evolution, physical degeneration, moral evolution, intellectual evolution, and the conditions of progress in civilisation we find all the side issues of the subject thoroughly explored. In a concluding chapter Mr. Headley speaks of the 'Great Unprogressive People,' by whom he signifies the Chinese, who in the onward march of civilisation have stood still for many ages past. His work, which is rendered additionally valuable by several illustrations, should meet with cordial acceptance from all students of an exceedingly fascinating subject.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'The Veterinary Manual,' by Frank Townend Barton. The object of this work is to provide the intelligent horse-owner with a reliable guide in the general management of his steeds in health and during time of accident or illness. From a survey of its pages we should think also that it would prove useful as a text-book for agricultural students presenting themselves for examination in this branch of veterinary science. The author enters very thoroughly and practically into the questions of stable and veterinary management, has much valuable instruction and advice to give in the matter of shoes and shoeing, and shows how an after-death examination should be entered upon. But of course the major portion of his book is occupied with an enumeration of ailments and their treatment. Great care has evidently been devoted to this, and every form of disease seems to be duly expatiated upon. The work should be of invaluable assistance to all horse-owners, whether large or small. It is copiously illustrated.

From Messrs. H. Grevel & Co.—'An Introduction to Modern Scientific Chemistry in the Form of Popular Lectures suited for University Extension Students and General Readers,' by Dr. Lassar-Cohn, translated from the second German edition by M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A. Every science is not adapted for popular exposition, or at least presents tremendous obstacles to this form of treatment, but in Dr. Lassar-Cohn's volume a happy mean may be said to have been arrived at. In other words, 'an attempt is made to give a succinct and accurate presentation of chemistry on strictly scientific lines, and at the same time in as popular a form as is compatible with the matter and the vast range of the subject.' The lecture form has been adopted, not only because it is the mos effective for illustrating the results that chemistry has obtained, but because experience has shown that it is the most popular with students, and that facts in this way can be more readily impressed upon the memory. Taken as a whole, this little work is one of the best guides to the study of modern chemistry that we know of.

From Messrs. William Hodge & Co., Glasgow.—'Bye-ways of Scottish Story,' by George Eyre-Todd. Some dozen reprinted papers form the contents of this volume, and in them the author discourses pleasantly and with erudition on such subjects as 'Braid Scots,' 'The Shrine of Douglas,' 'The Pagan Faith of Scotland,' 'Some Historic Apparitions,' 'The Three Tales of Lindores,' and so forth. Much interesting light is thrown on various curious beliefs and customs across the border, and the writer has evidently explored the store rooms of antiquity to good purpose.

From Mr. John Long.—'A Traitor in London,' by Fergus Hume. As usual with this author, a murder forms the basis for his plot, and suspicion is cast upon a number of people whose interests would be served by the death of the victim, until the end reveals that the crime was committed by quite a secondary personage, whose motive seems decidedly inadequate. It is easy thus to befog the reader, but we doubt whether it is very artistic. Among the rather highly coloured beings who are used to drag a red herring across the trail is a mysterious gentleman who persists in walking abroad in a snuff-coloured overcoat, and with two or three yards of crape wound round his neck. It is certainly not surprising to find that at one time he was confined in a lunatic asylum (where he should have been retained), but at one portion of the story it seems pretty certain that he is the murderer. In similar fashion other characters are implicated, not forgetting the villain of the narrative, Mr. Van Zwieten, a big handsome Dutchman, who is enamoured of the heroine of the story and is determined to possess her despite the accepted claims of Harold Burton, a young English officer. The scene after a time is transferred to South Africa, where Harold has been sent out with his regiment, and Van Zwieten is fighting on the side of the Boers; while, as it would never do for the heroine to be left behind, Brenda Searle is also present. Exciting times now follow. Van Zwieten makes several desperate attempts to capture Brenda and to kill Harold, but is in each case frustrated. Eventually he is killed himself, which is a very good thing. What we have revealed by no means exhausts the excitements of the story. There is enough left to thrill the most phlegmatic of readers.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'The Thin Red Line,' by Major Arthur Griffiths. This is a story of stirring military incidents, following on a mysterious murder committed in one of the gambling hells of Paris. The course of the narrative after leaving the French capital takes the reader in the first place to Gibraltar, then to the Crimea, where vivacious descriptions of the battles of the Alma and Inkerman, with the memorable charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava, and other features of the campaign are effectively worked in, and eventually the scene is again transferred to Paris. The framework of the story rests on the intrigues of a handsome pitiless woman who, to serve her own unscrupulous ends, stands short of nothing, not even murder. Her whole career has been one mass of deception, but ultimately her guilt is thoroughly brought home to her, and with this the story comes to a conclusion. The love interest is furnished by the attachment of one of her intended victims for a beautiful Spanish girl, and the diabolical attempts made on his life supply several of the most exciting moments in the plot. Major Griffiths, though an experienced hand in the work of fiction weaving, has never appeared to better advantage than in 'The Thin Red Line,' which by reason of its intensity, picturesque surroundings, and thrilling incidents, will hold the reader enchained.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Heart of Babylon,' by Deas Cromarty. The peace and doubts, efforts and waverings of a religious character are very ably set forth in this novel. Practically, it may be said to be a study of the one individual, Challoner, who has been educated amid an atmosphere of Methodism. He becomes an assistant in the large drapery establishment of Messrs. Chiffon & Spangle, where he has experiences which we imagine are novel among the employees of such firms. The story is interesting, though not quite convincing, and in the matter of conclusion it certainly leaves something to be desired.

From Mr. John Murray.—'John Charity, a Romance of Yesterday, containing certain Adventures and Love-Passages in Alta California of John Charity, Yeoman of Cranberry-Orcas, in the County of Hampshire, England, as set down by Himself,' edited by Horace Annesley Vachell. This is a delightful book, admirably written, full of healthy excitement, and replete with the true spirit of romance. Sturdy John Charity himself, with his frank, honest nature and noble adherence to the bonds of friendship, is a hero calculated to arouse anyone's sympathy and interest. No story of adventure would of course be entirely satisfactory without a due admixture of the love element, and this is lavishly provided in 'John Charity' to the excellent strengthening of the plot. Our only regret is that in one instance a sorrowful ending is the result. By reason of its many thrilling scenes, spirited characterisation, and able construction, 'John Charity' stands out as one of the best romantic stories of adventure that we have read this autumn.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'The Rising of 1745; with a Bibliography of Jacobite History, 1689–1788, by Charles Sanford Terry, M.A. This the third volume in the 'Scottish History from Contemporary Writers' series has to deal with a subject certainly not less interesting, and in some respects more fascinating than either of the previous volumes. There is a romantic side to the ill-fated attempt of Prince Charles Edward on the throne that even the hard facts of history cannot entirely suppress. Mr. Terry, in the small space at his disposal, has accomplished wonders, and has so arranged the material obtained from contemporary writers as to present a continuous and connected narrative. In the appendix a valuable and instructive bibliography of literature relating to Jacobite history is given, and interspersed among the pages are several illustrations and plans, including a portrait of Prince Charles from the engraving made by Sir Robert Strange, then a young man of twenty-four, when the Prince was in Edinburgh in the autumn of 1745. The letter written by the Chevalier to Cluny Macpherson when on board 'L'Heureux,' September 20, 1746, is also reproduced.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The Apostles' Creed: an Analysis of its Clauses, with reference to their Credibility,' by Archibald Hopkins. The chief impression derived from reading this book is that the world is becoming very Rational; reverence is a decaying quantity, and everything must be considered on its own practical merits. Upright conduct and brotherly friendliness are still to be regarded with commendation, but in how far do they proceed from religious teaching? Mr. Hopkins brings a battery of hard, practical reasoning to bear upon his subject, and the conflict, though we may not exactly sympathise with the method of warfare, is certainly not without interest. Mr. Hopkins declines to be hampered by anything like sentiment or tradition, and having cleared the way of these impediments he tilts at his obstacle with refreshing vigour. For the level-minded in religious matters this book will constitute an interesting study.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.—'Mrs. Frederick Graham,' by Alice A. Clowes. This novel would certainly have been more appropriately called 'Episodes in the History of the Graham Family,' since it extends over three generations without making any one member of the family particularly prominent or heroic. But the story is supposed to be told as a survey of her past life, extending over eighty-seven years, conveyed to Mrs. Frederick Graham in a dream, and this will probably account for the title. The story itself is by no means wanting in ability, and the author possesses considerable skill in the delineation of character. But we think it would have been better if she had concentrated her efforts, instead of supplying what may be termed a moving panorama of events. Figures appear on the scene only speedily to be lost sight of, or they rapidly become old and lose all interest. That Miss Clowes, having decided upon her material, should make such effective use of it testifies very forcibly to her gifts as a pleasant, unaffected narrator.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Vanity! the Confessions of a Court Modiste,' by 'Rita.' We do not know that these confessions are very agreeable. They lay emphasis on a phase of fashionable life that it is not altogether pleasant to contemplate, and the inner life of the dressmaking trade, its shifty expedients and business details, scarcely seems a worthy subject upon which to hang a fabric of fiction. But probably it will be said that we are judging the book a little too seriously, and that if it be entertaining enough no objection should be raised to the material of which it is composed. And entertaining it certainly is. 'Rita,' during her long experience as an author, has written few works that will so readily raise a laugh among her fair readers. Towards the conclusion the story assumes a tragic tone, seeing that the court modiste's partner in the dressmaking business, Harry Wildash, a man of infinite talent and resource, falls in love with a little American girl and deserts the modiste; but this is only after certain exciting events, based on the re-appearance of the modiste's husband, have taken place. The book is written in a lively fashion that cloaks a good many failings. It will of course be chiefly interesting to women, though readers of the masculine persuasion may be found who will cynically smile over its pages.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'A Hero of Romance,' by Richard Marsh. Mr. Marsh is wonderfully versatile. For some time we have got so accustomed to works of 'horror' from his pen that the very mention of his name is almost enough to give one the shivers; but now he serenely presents himself with quite an ordinary story of adventure, albeit there are one or two exciting episodes that seem to show that the author is holding himself under restraint. The story opens with an admirable description of the schoolboy hero, Master Bertie Bailey. It is a half-holiday, but he has been kept in to write an imposition of one hundred lines. This he has determined not to do, and eventually he so exasperates the junior master who has stayed in to watch him that the latter boxes his ears. As no corporal punishment is permitted at Mecklemburg House, Bertie threatens to reveal the matter to his father and the headmaster, and by this means escapes his task. He then joins his schoolmates in another room, and they forthwith proceed to mischief. Ultimately Bertie is encouraged to run away from Mecklemburg House, and this he does, only to encounter, as may be imagined, a very surprising and unexpected series of experiences. What these are we shall not spoil the reader's pleasure by disclosing, but we may say that they are of a character admirably adapted to keep youngsters from going to sleep. Towards this praiseworthy end Mr. Harold Copping has also contributed some highly effective illustrations.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'Doctrine and Principles: Popular Lectures on Primary Questions,' by C. E. Berry, B.D. The subjects treated of in this volume are all of great interest and importance in a consideration of the question of religious belief, and the clear thoughtful style of the writer is certain to fix the attention of readers once the book has been commenced. Among the topics brought under discussion are 'Agnostic Philosophy and Christian Faith,' 'The Origin of the Doctrine of the Atonement in the System of Latin Christianity,' 'The Reconciliation by the Sacrifice of Christ,' 'The Principle of Catholicism and the Principle of Protestantism Declared,' and 'The Theology of the Miraculous Birth.' The volume is one that is certain to prove interesting to Christian believers.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

IMPORTANT

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some Hundreds of Out-of-Print Books are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Publishers' Circular can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ..	8*s.* 6*d.*

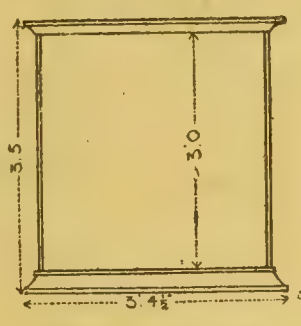
CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR

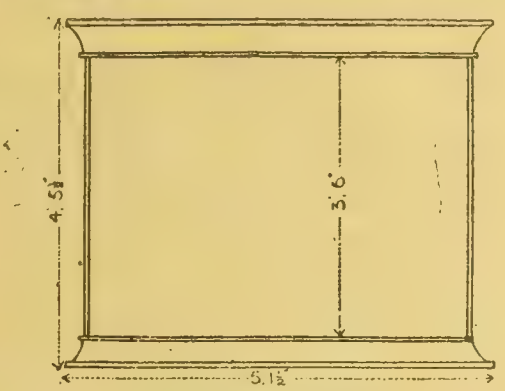
AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries:

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTON, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.



The Chivers' Indicator, 4,000 numbers.



The other Indicator, 4,000 numbers.

LEIGH.
LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
OLDHAM E. C. S. L.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH LIT. INST.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are:

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdues automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.
8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

THE BEST GUIDE TO THE PURCHASER OF GIFT-BOOKS THAT EXISTS

What the DAILY MAIL says of this annual volume: 'For comprehensiveness and careful arrangement puts all other similar publications into the background.'

'The Christmas Number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can truly claim to be the most comprehensive, best arranged, and most interesting manual of the book season.'—MANCHESTER COURIER.

WALTER SCOTT'S
NEW BOOKS

MANUALS OF EMPLOYMENT FOR EDUCATED WOMEN

Edited by CHRISTABEL OSBORN.

The object of this series of manuals will be to give to girls, more particularly to those belonging to the educated classes, who from inclination or necessity are looking forward to earning their own living, some assistance with reference to the choice of a profession, and to the best method of preparing for it when chosen. Each manual will be of the nature of a guide-book, and, with this end in view, the information given has been rendered as definite as possible.

Fcap. 8vo. stiff paper cover, price 1*s.*; or in limp cloth, price 1*s.* 6*d.*

1. SECONDARY TEACHING
By CHRISTABEL OSBORN and FLORENCE B. LOW. With an Introduction by Miss E. P. HUGHES, Associate of Newnham College, Camb.

2. ELEMENTARY TEACHING
By CHRISTABEL OSBORN. With an Introduction by Sir JOSHUA FITCH, LL.D.

3. SICK NURSING
By CHRISTABEL OSBORN. With an Introduction by Miss EVA C. E. LÜCKES, Matron of the London Hospital.

MY NEW CURATE:
a Story Gathered from the Stray Leaves of an Old Diary. By the Rev. P. A. SHEEHAN, P.P. Illustrated. 5s. net.

'Who will deny to these laughter-moving and pathetic pages insight, humour, strength, originality? They have added to Irish romance the charming, and, as I hope, the immortal figure of "Father Dan," parish priest, scholar, and almost saint. A notable character, the like of which no story-teller in Ireland has drawn, to my knowledge.'—Dr. WILLIAM BARRY.

'The Scotsman.'

'The present full and perusable volume begins "The Times History," a book which promises to be worthy of its name. . . . It is finely illustrated by portraits; and, in a word, begins a work that promises not only to satisfy the needs of readers who now wish to retrace the history of the past few years, but also to stand as a permanently valuable and authoritative book of reference on its subject.'

'The Glasgow Herald.'

'"The Times History of the War" is planned on a large scale. The first volume, which we notice to-day, takes us no further than the outbreak of hostilities, and is a thick book of 400 pages; it will be followed by four or five more, and it may be presumed that the production of these will not be unduly hurried. Such a scale will permit of great detail, and one would augur from Vol. 1 that an earnest effort will be made to preserve due proportion throughout between events to which the newspaper record has seemed necessarily to assign a uniform importance. The point of view is frankly British, but great pains have obviously been taken to do justice to the other side.'

'The Yorkshire Post.'

'The development of the Kruger policy aiming at the supremacy of the Transvaal in South Africa is lucidly described, with the aid of some new evidence, drawn mainly from Dutch sources. We need only add that the text of this volume is freely and effectively illustrated. The whole work seems likely to be one of great and permanent value.'

'Truth.'

'Handsomely got up, illustrated by many admirable portraits, and accompanied by an excellent map.'

'The Army and Navy Gazette.'

'A work so comprehensive and so generally accurate according to existing knowledge must take a foremost place at once, and of right, in contemporary literature. It may, indeed, be fairly predicted that if this great project be continued on the same lines, and the succeeding volumes are of the same value, as the first issued, the book will become the chief authority of the war.'

'The Globe.'

'This very important work is to take the form of five volumes, each of about 400 well-filled pages, and each well equipped with maps, battle-plans, and other illustrations. . . . .

'The book before us is complete in itself, and as a history of Anglo-Boer relations from 1815 to 1900 is without a rival, either in comprehensiveness or in accuracy. It is admirably printed on light paper, is freely illustrated by portraits in photogravure and half-tone, and has a bright, solid binding, one of whose features is a reproduction in gold of the medallion of the Queen made by Mr. Emil Fuchs. To judge from this initial volume, the complete work will be of the highest interest and value, and is destined to find its way on to the shelves of all earnest students of their country's history. It is a serious and competent contribution not only to military but to national history, and, as such, deserves every success.'

'The African Review.'

'We have received the first volume of the series, which, when completed, judging from No. 1, will rank as the finest and most complete history of the great campaign. It is, in fact, a monumental record of events in the field, with a full and well-balanced review of the political problems preceding the issue of the Boer ultimatum. It is, as may be supposed, admirably printed in clear type on good paper, and the illustrations, of which there are many, are marvels of the art. . . . A very full index will be an important feature of the work, in the production of which we are told no pains or expense have been spared. The aim has been to make it not only a vivid and true picture of the great war for supremacy in South Africa, but also the standard work of reference on the subject.'

'The World.'

'Mr. Amery has performed an extremely difficult task with so much fairness and so comprehensive a view that we look confidently for his narrative of the actual campaigns. The present volume contains a useful map of South Africa and many excellent reproductions of photographs of the chief persons mentioned in its pages. Mr. Chamberlain is appropriately given the first place.'

'The Daily Mail.'

'"The Times History of the War in South Africa," of which the first volume is published to-day, will be invaluable to soldiers and politicians if the high standard reached in the present instalment is maintained.'

December 7, 1900.

Many books have been written on the South African war, and the various battles of the campaign have been admirably described by many newspaper correspondents. But, with the exception of Dr. Conan Doyle's work noticed in a recent issue, no serious attempt has hitherto been made to write a history of the war as a whole, to point out in detail the causes that led to the outbreak, and to relate with becoming fulness the different strategic movements that have led to the British success. The introductory instalment towards such an attempt has now been issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. in the first volume of the long-heralded 'Times History of the War in South Africa,' edited by Mr. L. S. Amery, of All Souls College, Oxford. It may at once be said that the promise of this first volume is excellent, and that if the succeeding issues are kept up to the same standard the success of the entire work is assured. Much depends in an undertaking of this description on a well-balanced judgment. This Mr. Amery seems to possess, and his desire to be thoroughly impartial is everywhere manifest. At the same time he frankly confesses that he is convinced that the essential rights and justice of the controversy have been with the British people, and that the policy which has been pursued by the Government of this country has been, both politically and morally, justifiable. He fully admits that there is a Boer side to the argument, 'founded on the memory of old grievances, on peculiar social and political ideals, on a far-reaching national ambition,' but it is not a view of the question that the ordinary upholder of British rights can agree with.

Naturally this first volume is concerned with preliminary matters, that clearing of the ground before actual hostilities are commenced which forms such an important consideration in history, but which to the casual observer, anxious for the excitement and clamour of battle, seems somewhat wearisome and dull. In the opening chapter Mr. Amery considers the political importance of the war, the principle involved, the extent of the military operations, the negotiations before the outbreak of hostilities, and the pressing necessity that existed for reform in the Transvaal. He is careful to point out that the war was not a war of aggression or waged on behalf of capitalists. The Uitlander reform movement was, as a matter of fact, at first discouraged by the capitalists, and almost to the very last the capitalists were far more eager to bargain with the Transvaal Government for reasonable financial and administrative reforms than to clamour for the franchise. 'It was only when they finally realised that persuasion without the power to influence the Government through the elections was useless that they threw in their lot with those who demanded the franchise. They not unnaturally desired reform, but they had no craving for war.' In the succeeding chapter the relations between Great Britain and the Boers during the years 1815 to 1871 is discussed, and so by gradual steps we come to the annexation of the Transvaal by Sir Theophilus Shepstone in 1877, the first indications of President Kruger's policy, and the consideration of the Uitlander grievances. This last chapter, and that dealing with the struggle for political supremacy within the Transvaal before the Jameson Raid, are mainly the work of Miss Flora Shaw, while the greater part of Chapter VIII., treating of the relations of the Imperial Government with the Transvaal in the years following the Raid, is from a contributor who has preferred to remain anonymous. (Can it possibly be Mr. Chamberlain disguised in the garb of a political historian?) Remaining chapters of the volume are devoted to the subjects of the second reform movement in Johannesburg, the Bloemfontein Conference, the nature of the Afrikander mediation, and the beginning of the end. Each phase of the great subject is treated with remarkable fulness.

Speaking of the volume as a whole, nothing could be better or more admirably arranged. The work shows, on the part of editor and contributors, a close study of the events, extending over many years, that eventually resulted in the outbreak of hostilities. No aspect of the question has been neglected. Something also should be said for the clearness and excellence of the descriptions. In this connection the many interesting illustrations call for mention. They include portraits among others of Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Benjamin D'Urban, Sir Harry Smith, Sir George Grey, Sir Bartle Frere, Mr. Kruger (several), Sir George Colley, Sir T. Shepstone, President Brand, Dr. Jameson, Mr. Rhodes, Lord Rosmead, Lord Loch, Dr. Leyds, Sir Alfred Milner, Mr. Steyn, Mr. Reitz, Mr. Abraham Fischer, Sir J. H. de Villiers, Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, Sir W. Conyngham Greene, and the various Boer generals who took part in the war of 1881. In the matter of portraits alone the volume may be said to be a veritable portrait gallery of South African notabilities.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing a uniform edition of Mr. Marion Crawford's novels. The series opens with 'Mr. Isaacs,' the brilliant story of Indian life with which Mr. Crawford made his first appearance and his first success. Since then this versatile author has written of many countries; of modern Italy, more especially of modern Rome, repeatedly; of Sicily in 'Corleone' and 'Taquisara'; of Slavonic countries in the 'Cigarette Maker's Romance'; of Germany in 'Greifenstein' and 'Dr. Claudius'; of Constantinople and of Russia in 'Paul Patoff'; of Arabia in 'Khaled'; and of the United States in a whole series of novels of which 'Katherine Lauderdale' (recently published as a feuilleton in 'Les Temps) is perhaps the best known; he has even written of England in the 'Tale of a Lonely Parish.' His romance of the Second Crusade, 'Via Crucis,' was widely successful.

Professor A. Campbell Fraser has been long engaged on a new edition of the 'Complete Works of Bishop Berkeley,' including Posthumous Works, all arranged in chronological order. He has thoroughly revised and recast his large edition of the Works, published in three octavo volumes at the Clarendon Press in 1871, and now out of print. The introductions and notes have been practically re-written, and a brief new biography will be prefixed. All fresh materials that have come to light within the last thirty years have been incorporated throughout; and this may be regarded as the final Oxford edition of the Irish philosopher—so important a factor in the development of modern thought in Europe, and in America, with which his name is closely associated—who spent his last days in Oxford, and lies buried in its Cathedral Church. Professor Campbell Fraser's book will be published in four crown octavo volumes early next year.

Mark Rutherford's latest work will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week under the title 'Pages from a Journal.' The volume is described by the author as 'Essays, Notes, and Tales from a Journal of the Last Thirty Years.' The contents comprise such subjects as: A Visit to Carlyle; June; The Break of a Great Drought; Spinoza; Faith; Sir Walter Scott's Use of the Supernatural; and some Notes on Milton.

As announced in these columns some time ago, active preparations are being made for the Fourth International Congress of Publishers to be held in Leipzig in June next, under the presidency of Herr Albert Brockhaus. Further particulars as to the arrangements will be published in due course. In the meantime Herr Brockhaus is anxious to hear from gentlemen willing to read papers at the Congress. Any proposals for papers from English members should be sent to Mr. F. Macmillan, President of the Publishers' Association, who will forward them to Herr Brockhaus.

Principal S. D. F. Salmond, D.D., is engaged in the preparation of a new edition of his well-known work 'The Christian Doctrine of Immortality.' It will be published shortly by Messrs. T. & T. Clark, and will appear in an entirely new form and at a considerably lower price. Three editions of this work have already been exhausted. The first appeared in 1895, the second in 1896, and the third in 1897.

Messrs. Methuen & Co. are about to publish a volume of poems by Mr. Herbert Trench, late Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. The principal poem is stated to be unique in plan and execution. It is entitled 'Deirdre Wed,' and is an heroic narrative of the elopement of the most beautiful woman who ever lived in these islands. The narrative is uttered by the voices of three dead poets who actually lived ages apart from one another. The first Voice in the Homeric manner, the second Voice in the Celtic, and the third Voice in the Romantic, tell between them the adventures of the lovers. Then the Homeric Voice resumes the utterance and closes the episode. In addition to this singular narrative, there are nineteen short lyrics and ballads.

On Monday next Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton will publish Mr. Frank T. Bullen's religious autobiography, bearing the somewhat curious title 'With Christ at Sea.' The same publishers have almost ready a volume of verse by Mr. W. B. Yeats.

The Board of Agriculture notify that they will be pleased to furnish gratuitous copies of Notices of Publication of the Ordnance Survey Maps to any provincial bookseller. Applications for copies should be addressed to the Director General, Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton.

Captain Guggisberg has written an account of the Royal Military Academy which Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish under the title of 'The Shop: the Story of the Royal Military Academy.' The work is illustrated from photographs, and contains a series of coloured plates. The same publishers have ready 'Chinese Pictures,' by Mrs. Bishop, F.R.G.S. (Isabella Bird). It contains sixty illustrations from photographs by the author.

'Libyan Notes,' a large and important work on Anthropology which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are publishing, is the result of an expedition to Algeria undertaken this year by Mr. David Randall-Maciver, Laycock Student of Ægyptology at Worcester College, Oxford, and Mr. Anthony Wilkins. The object of the expedition was to establish if possible any trace of a connection between the Berber tribes and Egypt—a trace finally discovered in the pottery of the Kabyles—but incidentally the writer undertook and recorded a general investigation of the indigenous white race of Northern Africa known to Rome as the Numidians, Gætulians or Mauri—who figure as a white race on Egyptian monuments as far back probably as 1300 B.C. The Berbers studied belonged not to the nomad but the settled races, and the districts selected for study were the Aurès Mountains, the home of the Charvía and Kabylia, where the Kabyles' kindred, but of different speech, are the inhabitants. Thus in addition to the special chapters on the Kabyle pottery and the evidences of a Libyo-Egyptian connection, the book supplies information on the Berber history, their language, their political and social organisation; detailed descriptions both of the Aurès and Kabylia, their inhabitants and the local industries; observations and statistics on the physical type of the Berbers based on measurements; and finally some remarks on the rude stone monuments of Algeria.

A volume on 'England's Neglect of Education,' by Professor John Perry, the President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, will shortly be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin. Professor Perry advocates many radical changes in our present system of education, and believes that his views are such that any intelligent person not directly interested in the present method will admit their soundness. Moreover, they are not, as he is careful to point out, new views, but have long been held by Mr. Herbert Spencer and other educationalists.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are to publish a memoir of the Rev. Josiah Harrison, so long the pastor of Park Chapel, Camden Town. To this Dr. Horton has contributed an appreciation, speaking of the beautiful simplicity of Mr. Harrison's character, the good work he did, and the many acts of noble devotion to his calling that rendered his name so much revered.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus have in the press a new book by Mr. Ernest A. Vizetelly, entitled 'A Path of Thorns.' The same publishers are issuing a new adventure story by Mr. Ernest Glanville, bearing the attractive title of 'Max Thornton: a Boys' Story of the War.' The last book is illustrated by J. S. Crompton.

The 'Hampstead Annual' for 1900, edited by Greville E. Matheson and Sydney Mayle, will be issued shortly. It will contain contributions from Canon Ainger, Dr. Garnett, C.B., Professor Hales, Arnold White, I. Zangwill, Maud Egerton King, John Fulleylove, H. W. Nevinson, Ernest Rhys, H. A. Bryden, and others, and will be illustrated with numerous views of Old Hampstead, reproduced by special permission from the collections of Mr. George Potter, of Highgate, and Mr. T. J. Barratt, of Hampstead.

A work entitled 'Britain's Sea Kings and Sea Fights,' written by R. Fletcher Robinson, Commander Claude Harding, R.N., Tighe Hopkins, F. Norreys Connell, Captain H. Garbett, R.N., Herbert Compton, Major G. Le Mesurier Gretton, A. Hilliard Atteridge, and other writers, and illustrated from drawings by well-known artists of the day, is published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

A large volume on 'Byzantine Art in Greece,' published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., is the fruits of a grant made by the Committee of the British School at Athens, and by other subscribers, to Messrs. R. Weir Schultz and Sidney Howard Barnsley, to enable these gentlemen to complete the researches which they had already begun. The volume contains, not the entire results of the research, but a monograph on the Monastery of St. Luke of Stiris, in Phocis, and on the dependent monastery of Saint Nicolas-in-the-Fields near Skripou, in Bœotia.

Few books can boast of such a remarkable array of distinguished names as 'Eccentricities of Genius: Memories of Famous Men and Women of the Platform and the Stage,' by Major J. B. Pond, just published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. Among these are Matthew Arnold, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Parker, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Rudyard Kipling, Dean Hole, Sir Henry Irving, Dr. Boyd Carpenter, Dean Stubbs, William Henry Drummond, 'Ian Maclaren,' Hall Caine, Walt Whitman, Israel Zangwill, Anthony Hope, Washington Irving, H. M. Stanley, S. R. Crockett, Joseph Jefferson, William Winter, and Marion Crawford.

A new poet in the person of Mr. Wallace Stevenson is bringing out a volume entitled 'Some Songs and Verses,' through Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.

Macmillan's Magazine for December contains two articles of special interest at the present time: 'The Reservist in War,' by 'A Regimental Officer,' and 'The Missionary in China,' by Mr. F. Thorold Dickson. The officer's regiment was one of the first to leave England for South Africa, landing at Durban on November 14, 1899.

Eight days later it took part in the severe night action of Willow Grange, and was subsequently employed in every operation in Natal under Sir Redvers Buller. Its losses in action were very heavy, and it also suffered severely in the epidemic of enteric fever which followed the relief of Ladysmith. There now remain fit for duty after twelve months of continual fighting, 650 Reservists out of 800, and 400 out of 700 colour men. A better test of the value of the Reserve system, which had hitherto been uncertain, could not well have been found. The article is written in a tone of sympathy with his men and a just pride in their achievements altogether admirable. The number also contains Professor Lodge's introductory lecture to the History class in Edinburgh University on the subject of 'Union and Annexation.'

To Messrs. Macmillan's series of 'Elementary Classics' has been added an edition of Cornelius Nepos—'The Lives of Miltiades and Epaminondas'—prepared by the Rev. G. H. Nall, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster School. The introduction gives a few facts as to Cornelius Nepos and criticisms of his work: it also summarises the historical facts needful to understand the career of Epaminondas and Miltiades. The notes are accompanied by a vocabulary and a map.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish a novel, entitled 'Sarah P. G.,' by H. Sant Lanyon, which deals with the experiences of a very young orphan girl who, being left alone in the world, advertises in the most fashionable newspapers for a lady chaperone.

Mr. Fisher Unwin is to publish a volume by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald which, judging from the title, 'Fifty Years of Catholic Life and Progress in England,' should present many points of extreme interest. It deals with the Roman Catholic Church in this country from the time of Wiseman and the re-established Archbishopric of Westminster. Three Cardinals are referred to in the book—Wiseman, Manning, and Vaughan.

LETTS'S DIARIES.

With each succeeding year the high merit and exceeding usefulness of these diaries published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. seem to become more marked. That they have earned a world-wide reputation for themselves goes without saying, and as aids to the business man and literary worker they could scarcely be improved upon. In their various sizes and bindings they satisfy every business requirement. Special editions of these books are prepared for Australasia, India, South Africa, and our principal colonies. A valuable feature of the series is their strong binding. Many cheap diaries are put on the market, but none that can favourably compare in the matter of general production with Letts's Diaries as published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. Constant use has proved their valuable properties, and there is scarcely a business man to-day who will not warmly testify to their extreme utility. One good point regarding them that is particularly deserving of mention is that they are not over-burdened with information, and such as is afforded is admirably concise and well arranged.

A NOVELTY IN BOOKMAKING.

The latest number of the Periodical, published by Mr. Henry Frowde, gives some particulars of 'The English Dialect Grammar' which Professor Wright is editing for the Oxford Press. The editor, we learn, is collecting phonographic specimens of English dialects, partly to enable him to check the material for a comprehensive comparative grammar of all the English dialects in the United Kingdom, and partly to hand down to posterity a faithful record of the dialects as spoken at the end of the nineteenth century. Dr. Wright hopes to get about 500 phonographic specimens, and with this end in view he has prepared a list of 'sentences' containing the most salient points wanted, with full directions for turning the sentences into genuine dialect. In the case of people who have no knowledge of English grammar, Dr. Wright sends the 'specimen' to some educated person in the district from which the dialect is derived, and induces him to practise the specimen with some dialect-speaking person until the latter can read the specimen in good, genuine dialect. When this has been accomplished, Dr. Wright goes to the place and phonographs the result himself. By setting about the matter in this way the Professor has been most successful, and already he possesses quite a number of first-rate specimens. When the specimens have served their primary purpose, Dr. Wright proposes to hand them over to some public library or institution, to be preserved for all time for the benefit of future generations. A hundred years hence people are sure to doubt some of the statements made in the Grammar, and sceptics will be able, thanks to the phonograph, to hear what any particular dialect sounded like at the time the work was written.

In the directions to users of the phonograph Dr. Wright points out that some of the words occurring in the specimen are probably not used in certain dialects, and that for these others should be substituted; that it is necessary to be careful about the correct use of the pronouns; and that the exact syntactical construction used in any given locality should be recorded. A large amount of material for the Grammar has already been collected, and hundreds of people throughout the United Kingdom have volunteered to render assistance in this part of the work. The Grammar will be treated historically, and will contain phonology, accidence, and, if possible, the syntax of the dialects. At the end of the work it is intended to give about 100 short specimens of the most typical dialects, phonetically rendered. As soon as all the material has been collected, it will take about three years to prepare the work for press. In many ways the Grammar will be the most valuable part of the 'English Dialect Dictionary.'

As for the 'English Dialect Dictionary' itself, five years have passed since its first page was printed, and since then ten parts have been issued to the subscribers at regular intervals of six months with clock-like punctuality. The first two volumes (A—C, D—G) contain close upon 40,000 words, illustrated by nearly 100,000 quotations, besides 85,000 references to glossaries, &c. There are in all about 185,000 references, giving the exact source from which the material for every word has been obtained. It is a rigid rule of the editor always to give the authority for every piece of information contained in the Dictionary. Volume III., containing the letters H—L, will all be printed off this month, and considerable progress has been made with the preparation for press of Volume IV. (M—R). It is quite certain that the material as far as the end of the letter O will have been prepared by the end of this year, and about 120 pages of M will be printed off before the Christmas holidays. Unless something quite unexpected happens, the preparation for press of Volume IV. will be finished about the end of next June. Volume V. will contain the letters S—T, and Volume VI. will contain U—Z, the supplement, the bibliography of the many thousands of books which have been read specially for the Dictionary, and, lastly, the Grammar already mentioned.

By the end of 1905, therefore, unless unforeseen circumstances arise, it will be possible to supply subscribers with the whole of the six volumes.

HOW UNCLE REMUS CAME INTO BEING.

In view of the interest excited by Mr. Joel Chandler Harris's new book, 'On the Wing of Occasions,' just published by Mr. Murray, the following particulars of his career will interest our readers. Mr. Harris has been writing dialect stories for a quarter of a century, and the start was quite unexpected. One day the editor of the Atalanta Constitution said to his young assistant: 'Suppose you try your hand at writing dialect stories. Can't you get up one for to-morrow's paper in addition to your editorial work?' Mr. Harris looked up at Capt. Howell in astonishment, and then replied with some hesitation: 'Why, Captain, I never undertook to write dialect stories in my life. I don't believe I can do it. You will have to let me off.' 'You don't mean to tell me you can't write dialect stories, Harris,' replied the editor. 'You know you can. Granting that you have never tried your hand at it, I am nevertheless satisfied that you can write good dialect stories. You have an acute sense of humour, and you can sit down and tell plantation stories by the hour. So give us something in negro dialect for to-morrow's paper.' When Mr. Harris was left alone after this brief interview, he began to knit his eyebrows in profound study over the editor's suggestion. On trying to revive his recollections of plantation days in old Putnam County, where he was born, he found that he was in possession of an abundance of material for dialect stories. But could he write them in such a style as to catch the popular ear? This was what troubled him. Finally he decided to make an attempt, and after selecting the story which pleased him best he began to tell it just as he had heard it first from the lips of one of the old negroes on the plantation. When he had finished he began to cast about for an appropriate name to give the old negro into whose mouth he had put the story, and finally decided upon the name of 'Uncle Remus.' Mr. Harris was better satisfied with his work than he thought he would be, but still he was not easy in mind because he could not foresee how the story would be received. But his anxieties were soon dispelled. When the paper came out the next morning with his story occupying a corner on the editorial page everybody was captivated with it and wanted to know who Uncle Remus was. They found the humour of the story delicious and the dialect correct. Without abandoning his editorial duties Mr. Harris continued to furnish negro dialect stories to the paper almost daily, and, as an evidence of the popularity which they speedily acquired, they were no sooner published than they were copied extensively by newspapers all over the United States. Soon Mr. Harris found himself in receipt of numerous letters from magazines and other periodicals asking for dialect contributions. He filled most of the orders that he received, but he continued steadily to toil away at his editorial work on the paper, and as an evidence of his industrious habits and his systematic methods of work he was enabled during his twenty-five years of laborious service on the paper to produce not less than eighteen or twenty books in addition to his regular work. Though Mr. Harris is best known to the world of literature as the creator of 'Uncle Remus,' he has lately acquired additional laurels as the creator of 'Aunt Minervy Ann,' whom many regard as superior to 'Uncle Remus.'

CONTINENTAL LITERATURE.

Three new works on Louis XV. are announced: 'Louis XV et Marie Leczinska,' par Pierre de Nolhac, a handsome quarto, splendidly illustrated after Nattier, Cochin, Boucher, and Vanloo, is published by Manzi, Joyant & Co.; 'Le Mariage de Louis XV,' from new documents and an unpublished correspondence of Stanislas Leczinski, is issued by Plon, Nourrit & Co.; and 'La Vieillesse de Louis XV,' by André Foulon de Vaulx, which is published by Alphonse Lemerre. The author of the famous mot, 'Après moi le déluge,' could scarcely have expected to be so honoured after his death.

The last-named firm's announcements include 'L'Échelle de Jacob: une Vision,' by Prince Joseph Lubomirski. This new work of the successful romance-writer is said to surpass in interest all his former productions; and it is even affirmed that neither Swift, Edgar Allan Poe, nor E. T. W. Hoffmann, ever created anything more fantastic. The book is at the same time amusing and thoughtful. 'L'Heureux Ménage' is the title of Marcel Prévost's new story to be issued immediately.

'Le Mariage de Louis XV,' by H. Gauthier-Villars, shows, from fresh documents and the unpublished letters of the deprived King of Poland Stanilas Leczinski, the part played by him who was called by Voltaire the old soldier Vauchon, in bringing about that ill-omened match, which was planned to retain the young king under the control of the Duke de Bourbon and Madame de Prie, and as a piece of vengeance on the part of the latter. The correspondence sheds quite a new light on this rather shady transaction, and throws a searchlight on some society manners of the period. Amongst other announcements of Librairie Plon we note the following: 'Lettres du Rév. Père Didon à Mlle. Th. V.,' a work eagerly awaited by the admirers of the eloquent preacher and popular teacher. 'Mémoires anecdotiques du Général Marquis de Bonneval, 1786-1873,' which, although originally intended for the perusal of a small circle of friends and acquaintance, and not laying claim to historical value, are yet full of interest for the general reader. 'L'Indépendance Grecque et l'Europe,' par Gaston Isambert, relates the diplomatic history of the Greek revolt of 1821-1831 and the intervention of the European Powers, on which followed the formation of the kingdom of Greece. The Marquis de Vogüé has made an important contribution to the history of France under Louis XIV. by editing some hitherto unpublished correspondence announced by Librairie Plon as 'Le Duc de Bourgogne et le Duc de Beauvilliers: Lettres inédites, 1700-1708.' These letters were addressed by Louis of France, Duke of Burgundy, and grandson of the Roi-Soleil, to his tutor and friend [illegible], Duke of Beauvilliers.

So numerous have been the publications relating to French history of recent years, and so important the discoveries made, that M. Ernest Lavisse decided to undertake, in conjunction with some of the most competent historians and professors of France, the scheme framed by his master, the late M. Duruy, to write a French history from the earliest times to that of the Republic. This history, will be published by Librairie Hachette in forty-five parts, forming eight volumes, royal octavo. [illegible] undertaking may be learnt from this passage in the prospectus: "Not long ago the history of old France was subject of controversy between the friends and enemies of the Revolution. Nowadays all liberal-minded people think it puerile to reproach their ancestors for having believed in ideas and entertained feelings no longer ours. The historian, knowing that in all ages men have done their best to seek the most desirable conditions of living, endeavours to judge their doings with an unprejudiced mind."

One of the most mysterious and disconcerting figures of the French Revolution and the Terror was the conventional Vadier, briefly dismissed by Carlyle as 'found worthy of Déportation, of Banishment beyond seas.' Of this worthy M. Albert Tournier has published through E. Flammarion a biography stranger than any romance called 'Vadier président du Comité de Sûreté générale sous la Terreur.'

Of a man of another age and character, the Chancellor de l'Hôpital, a biography is announced by Librairie Fischbacher from the pen of Henri Amphoux, under the title 'Michel de l'Hôpital et la liberté de conscience au XVI^e^ Siècle.' Another interesting publication of the same firm is 'Superiorité des Animaux sur l'Homme,' by Dr. Ph. Maréchal.

The biography of Cardinal Newman, on which Mlle. Lucie Félix-Faure, daughter of the late President Faure, has been so long engaged, is just published by Perrin & Co., as 'Newman: sa vie et ses œuvres,' with a photogravure portrait.

'It is an open secret,' says the Kreuz Zeitung, 'that Prince Hohenlohe has kept a record of his political life, and possesses a valuable collection of letters bearing upon the history of our time. He would confer a new service on his country were he to publish even a portion of this historical matter. It may be truly said that what happened before 1890 is already matter of history; and it has long been recognised that posthumous publications, such as the memoirs of Hardenberg, Metternich, or Talleyrand, have lost value immensely, owing to the arbitrary condition that half-a-century had to elapse before publication. The carefully kept secrets had long before been revealed, and this process of illumination will in future proceed still more rapidly.'

FOR BOOKSELLERS AND BOOK-LOVERS.

We have received from Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons a work entitled 'Books for All Readers,' by Ainsworth Rand Spofford, late librarian of the Congress Library at Washington, which we heartily commend to members of the trade and to lovers of books among the general public. Mr. Spofford writes as a lifelong student, and his remarks on authors and their works, if not always convincing, are frequently shrewd and instructive. The volume, which runs to 500 pages, deals with such interesting subjects as the choice of books, book-buying, the enemies of books, restoration and reclamation of books, the art of reading, and aids to readers, as well as with library management in general. To enable our readers to form some idea of the value of Mr. Spofford's work we quote some remarks on the art of binding—a subject not too well understood in this country.

[illegible] Now as to the relative merits and demerits of [illegible] covered with paper for any book which is to be subjected to perusal, and cloth is too flimsy and shaky in its attachment to the book, however cheap, for any library volumes which are to be constantly in use. It is true that since the bulk of the new books coming into any library are bound in cloth, they may be safely left in it until well worn; and by this rule all the books which nobody ever reads may be expected to last many years, if not for generations. Cloth is a very durable material, and will outlast some of the leathers; but any wetting destroys its beauty, and all colours but the darkest soon become soiled and repulsive, if in constant use. In most libraries I hold that every cloth-bound book which is read must sooner or later come to have a stout leather jacket.

The many beautiful new forms of cloth binding should have a word of praise, but the many more which we see of gaudy, fantastic, and meretricious bindings, and frightful combinations of colours, must be viewed with a shudder.

Vellum, formerly much used for bookbindings, is the modern name for parchment. Parchment was the only known writing material up to the twelfth century, when paper was first invented. There are two kinds—animal and vegetable. The vegetable is made from cotton fibre or paper, by dipping it in a solution of sulphuric acid and (sometimes) gelatine, then removing the acid by a weak solution of ammonia, and smooth-finishing by rolling the sheets over a heated cylinder. Vegetable parchment is used to bind any booklet which it is desired to dress in an elegant or dainty style, but is highly unsuitable for library books. Vellum proper is a much thicker material, made from the skins of calves, sheep, or lambs soaked in lime-water, and smoothed and hardened by burnishing with a hard instrument or pumice-stone. The common vellum is made from sheepskin splits, or skivers, but the best from whole calfskins. The hard, strong texture of vellum is in its favour, but its white colour and tendency to warp are fatal objections to it as a binding material.

Sheepskin—once the full binding for most school books, and for a large share of law and miscellaneous works for libraries—is now but little used, except in its disguised forms. It is too soft a leather for hard wear and tear, and what with abrasion and breaking at the hinges (termed by binders the joints), it will give little satisfaction in the long run. Under the effect of gas and heated atmospheres sheep crumbles and turns to powder. Its cheapness is about its only merit, and even this is doubtful economy.

Other forms of binding are also considered in detail.

Mr. Spofford remarks that the qualities to be desired in a book (apart from literary merit) are (1) flexibility in opening; (2) evenness of the cover, which should lie flat and smooth; (3) compactness—solid, and not loose or spongy; (4) correct and even lettering of titles and other tooling; (5) good wide margins. A well-bound book, he adds, always opens flat. From these extracts it will be seen that the book is written by one who is familiar with all details of book-making. The author covers an astonishing amount of ground, and compresses within his 500 pages a great deal of information for which every scholar and book-lover will thank him. Readers of all classes will find the book eminently suggestive.

SALE JOTTINGS.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Story of my Life,' by Augustus J. C. Hare, Vols. IV., V. and VI. The characteristics of the concluding three volumes of this 'Life' remain pretty much the same as of the preceding three volumes. There is the same pleasant, if somewhat discursive, narrative, the same fondness for gossip regarding well-known personages, and the same excellent display of illustration. Interspersed here and there are many lively stories. We are tempted to quote one of them, though it savours of the improper. It seems that at a country house where a certain lady (the narrator of the story) was staying, there was a very pleasant man named Jones, and there was also a lady who had a maid called Jones; the people in the house knew this, because there was a confusion about letters. The lady's husband went away for the day, and as she was going to walk to the station in the evening to meet him, the mistress of the house asked Mr. Jones to walk with her. When the train came in the husband was not there, but just then a telegram was brought in. 'Oh!' said the lady, 'oh-o-o, I'm sure my husband is dead; I can't open it.' 'Nonsense,' said Mr. Jones, 'if he is dead he cannot have sent you a telegram.' 'Well, I can't open it; I know it's something dreadful—I can't, I can't, I can't.' So at last Mr. Jones opened it for her and read it aloud, not seeing at once what it contained. It was: 'I am all right, unavoidably detained. If you are at all nervous, get Jones to sleep with you.' This story was told at a dinner party given by Lord Egerton of Tatton, and was received, according to Mr. Hare, with shouts of merriment. The reader who once takes up the first of these three volumes will speedily find himself immersed in such a stream of pleasant anecdote and reminiscence that he will float agreeably on the tide until the conclusion is reached. There are dry passages here and there, but on the whole the current is strong enough to carry him triumphantly to the end.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Verity,' by Sidney Pickering. Perusal of this story has set us wondering on the strange masculine idols women set up for themselves. This is, of course, assuming that this novel represents real life, which we have no reason to doubt. The hero of this story is one, Colonel Noel Champneys, handsome, no doubt, and with that debonair, insouciant manner which is almost always attractive to the fair sex, since it indicates a certain masterfulness of character, but as selfish, cold-hearted, and self-centred a man as you could find. And yet Verity, the charming heroine of the story, looks up to, idolises, sacrifices everything to this self-glorified being. When he descends from his pedestal, it is regarded as one of the noblest self-sacrifices the world has ever heard of. No doubt excuse is to be made for Verity, because she has an unhappy home life—it is certainly not pleasant to be whipped by one's father, even though he be a clergyman, and put to sleep without food in a barn, among the rats. But all this took place at the commencement of the century, since which time, we flatter ourselves, matters have improved. On the whole, 'Verity' scarcely realises the expectations aroused by the opening chapters. It is a good story, but the author has manifestly capabilities for even better work.

From the same.—'An Essay on Personality as a Philosophical Principle,' by the Rev. Wilfrid Richmond, M.A. The author attacks a somewhat abstruse subject with great confidence and energy, and on the whole he succeeds very well. The book is divided into two parts, treating respectively of Experience and Personality and Personality and its Faculties. Under these headings the various questions of experience, meaning and definition of the term personality, feeling, will, intellect, and emotion, are considered. As may naturally be expected in a work of such profundity, there are several notes—elucidations of previous matter for the most part—collected together in the form of an appendix. In his concluding chapter the author points out that 'to the English mind two things are obviously and indisputably real—matter and the fellowship of men. Both of these is a type of reality, and represents an element in reality, more markedly present, it may be, at this or that point in experience, but present presumably throughout the whole of experience. The undeniable reality of matter has often been represented as due to the undeniable testimony of feeling and sense. . . . Dr. Johnson's kick represents an appeal, not to the sentient subject, but to the thing—there, outside you, over against you. This is the primary view of reality with which the Englishman instinctively declines to part company.' Mr. Richmond's volume will be found attractive by those who are interested in philosophy as a study, and the author's diligence in pursuit of his subject is undoubted.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Elements of Hydrostatics,' by S. L. Loney, M.A. This little volume, one of the well-known 'Pitt Press Mathematical' series, has evidently been written with a thorough knowledge of the requirements of students, gathered during a long period of scholastic work. It is admirably arranged, clearly expressed, and suitably illustrated. As a class-book for junior mathematical students it should certainly meet with great success.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'Campaign Pictures of the War in South Africa,' by A. G. Hales. Such readers as are not weary of war books will read with interest these 'letters from the front' by Mr. Hales. He accompanied the Australian contingent, and his narrative is mainly confined to its doings. He gives, however, some 'outside pictures,' such as an account of the battle of Magersfontein, which has been better described by other pens. Mr. Hales always writes with a certain rude vigour and a cocksureness which by no means prejudices the reader in his favour. Many passages in the book have an unpleasant suggestion of exaggeration; but one feels that Mr. Hales tells the truth as he sees it—with an evident desire to force it down all doubters' throats. To us the most interesting chapters are those which describe the life and habits of the Boers: for it should be mentioned that Mr. Hales was among the correspondents who were wounded and captured by our opponents. He recognises the good qualities of the Boer, and furnishes the best description of Steyn we have seen. Much of what he tells concerning the war in general is already ancient history, and in a large measure has lost its interest, so rapidly do events move. While we cannot call 'Campaign Pictures' the best book which the war has given us, it is far from being the worst; and though Mr. Hales is sometimes so exuberant as to raise a smile, he never falls into dulness. The book, we may add, contains a frontispiece-portrait of the author in shirt sleeves, and is dedicated to Sir John Robinson, manager of the Daily News.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'An Aristocratic Detective,' by Richard Marsh. We spoke in a recent number of Mr. Marsh's versatility as a novelist, and on first taking up 'An Aristocratic Detective' we imagined we had fresh proof of this, since he had now invaded the province of Scotland Yard. Further investigation, however, showed us that only four of the stories were of the ordinary detective order, the remainder treating of various subjects with a varying degree of success. One of the best is of a young cleric who was in the habit of supplying written sermons to a London firm for transmission to one of their clients. Afterwards Providence so ordained it that he accepted a curacy with the other partner to this bargain, and had the mortification of hearing his rector preach one of his own sermons, and also take to himself credit for a wonderfully powerful discourse. It seems he had acquired quite a reputation as an orator on the foundation of the other man's work. What came of this unexpected situation we must leave our readers to find out. All the stories are pleasantly entertaining, and in one or two instances actually exciting.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Farthest South: an Account of the Startling Discovery made by the Wise Antarctic Expedition,' by Harold E. Gorst. The humour of this narrative, such as it is, is derived from the ineffable conceit of an ignorant young millionaire named Wise, who organises an expedition in search of the South Pole. His idea at first is to journey thither by motor car; but the utter impracticability of this notion being pointed out to him by the only level-headed member of the party (who has the commonplace name of Smith), he agrees to substitute for the latest method of fashionable progression a quadricycle specially constructed for travelling over the ice. So the expedition sets forth, and much capital is attempted to be made of the incongruities of its different members. Needless to say, the party come to grief, but the humour of the situation throughout is very much forced, and we are afraid the book will provoke only a feeble smile.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Olive Tracy,' by Amy Le Feuvre. If there is no great excitement in this story—no absorbing events that cause the eyes to sparkle and the breath to come quick—we have, on the other hand, a pleasant unaffected method of narration which is certain to win many readers. The characters who appear in Miss Le Feuvre's book are such as largely preponderate in the actual world, and they are delineated in a fashion which is thoroughly natural and sympathetic. Lovers of bright homely fiction will find that in Miss Le Feuvre's companionship they are likely to have an exceedingly agreeable time.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'A Tragedy of Three,' by T. T. Dable. He who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind—such is the moral of this well-told story. It is composed of old and well-worn material, which has been so excellently refurbished as to seem almost like new. Horace Arthington, a politician, is a clever man of middle age—of naturally good attributes, but with a past. The past, as it usually does, takes the form of a woman. Eventually Arthington marries a pure, lofty-minded girl, to whom he is devotedly attached. The past then turns up to confront him. The indignant woman whom he has deceived in the years gone by naturally refuses to be shelved for any rival, even when protected by the ceremonial rites of Mother Church, and war to the death is waged. Happily sweet innocence gets the better of depraved guilt (so-called), and the story casts anchor in untroubled waters. It is an interesting story, if scarcely convincing in portions, and is certain to appeal to the sympathies of a wide circle of readers.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Day of Wrath,' by Maurus Jókai. Translated from the Hungarian by R. Nisbet Bain. This story, as the translator reminds us, was written shortly after the collapse of the Magyar Revolution of 1848-49, when Hungary lay 'crushed and bleeding under the heel of triumphant Austria and her Russian ally; when, deprived of all her ancient political rights and liberties, she had been handed over to the domination of the stranger, and saw her best and noblest sons either voluntary exiles or suspected rebels under police surveillance. Jókai himself was one of those who had to fly from the displeasure of the existing rulers, and his inward sense of injustice gives intensity and force to the narrative. The book is a story of suffering, crime, and punishment relieved by a vein of happy romance which is one of the distinguishing features of the author's style. Occasionally the heroics, if we may so term Jókai's outbursts of righteous indignation, are indulged in too freely; but the novel as a whole is full of exciting situations, fine characterisation, and charming love passages. We scarcely think it is the best of the author's works, but it certainly displays in a marked manner the good and bad attributes of his method. Mr. Nisbet Bain may be complimented on having performed the work of translation so well.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Sleeping Beauty and other Prose Pieces,' by Richard Le Gallienne. Mr. Le Gallienne dedicates his book succinctly and gracefully 'to Clement Shorter with admiration of a courageous critical gift too rarely employed, and in friendship.' We wish we could praise what follows, but to speak plain truth Mr. Le Gallienne's writing is becoming painfully thin. Some of the pieces included in this volume may have done well enough in the columns of minor magazines and newspapers, but were not worth reprinting. The book is made up of 'fancies' and so-called criticisms of current books and fashions—that is to say, short chapters on Mr. Kipling, Mr. Stephen Phillips's poetry, on idealism, realism, tragedy, and so forth. There is some pretty writing of the effeminate kind in the book, but we search in vain for fresh and suggestive ideas. Perhaps the best thing in the volume is the paper called 'The Dethroning of Stevenson,' in which Mr. George Moore is quite justly rebuked for his foolish remarks regarding the author of 'Prince Otto.' But why does Mr. Le Gallienne talk like a penny-a-liner of Stevenson being 'completer' than someone else?

From Mr. John Long.—'The Luck of a Lowland Laddie,' by May Crommelin. John Ramsay, the hero of this story, is the seventh son of a seventh son, and according to popular superstition has a remarkable career before him. Shortly after his birth, which takes place under rather exciting conditions, it is prophesied of him by a Highland beldam gifted with the power of second sight that 'every seventh year of his life till four times seven something strange—for good or for ill—must happen to him. . . . Three times his life shall be in danger, by Fire, Water, and Tree. And great sorrow shall threaten him, from one who is of his bone and blood. Money shall come to him from strangers, also from the dead who never knew him. He will have the power of drawing hearts, and have great happiness in love. Yet he will never enjoy his very own, unless through others, and he must wander for years in strange lands.' It is needless to say that all these things come to pass, and in following the fortunes of the good-looking hero the reader will be interested in observing how each feature of the sibyl's prediction is made true. The story, however, though attractive enough in its way, scarcely shows Miss Crommelin at her best, and even a plentiful use of italics will not arouse the reader to extreme excitement where no actual situation exists. Ultimately John Ramsay surmounts all the difficulties consequent on his exceptional parentage, and is thoroughly happy.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Foes-in-Law,' by Rhoda Broughton. Though opening somewhat tamely, Miss Broughton's new novel soon secures a firm hold on the reader's attention. Immediately we find ourselves among the lively boisterous Kergouet family, all apathy is at an end. True to her usual plan of construction, Miss Broughton confines the main action of her story to four characters. These are the 'foes,' Lettice Trent and her hated sister-in-law Marie Trent (née Kergouet), the Rev. Rundal Chevening, a young clergyman of rather pronounced but shallow susceptibilities, and Gabriel Kergouet, Marie's eldest brother. The blood relations of all these characters we have met before in Miss Broughton's works, but none the less it is extremely pleasant to make their acquaintance again. There is a fine strain of humanity in their thoughts and actions, and they stand out as creatures of real flesh and blood instead of mere bran and sawdust puppets worked on a string. One thing has again struck us in reading this story, that Miss Broughton is by no means so successful in delineating male characters as in her portraits of the wayward, capricious representatives of her own sex. Her men are much more romantically limned than the women, and hence there is a greater degree of picturesque theatricalism, if one may use such a term, about them. But whatever its detailed attributes may be, 'Foes-in-Law' as a whole is thoroughly interesting, and in many respects is the best novel that Miss Broughton has given the public in recent years.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Elmslie's Drag-net; being Certain Notes made by Him in the Fishing Village of Aberspendie,' by E. H. Strain. We have every praise for these studies of Scottish life and character, though misgivings may arise as to their attraction for a wide circle of readers. There are five sketches in all, and each, we are told, 'has its justification at least, if not its original, in real life.' Probably the beings as a whole belong rather to the past than to the present generation, but in their independence, industry, and sound common sense we see the characteristics that have built up the nation. The element of religion, too, is not left out of account, nor the part it has played in sustaining them in time of trial and suffering. Though perhaps, as we have hinted, a little too solid for the ordinary reader, these sketches will appeal with irresistible force to all who have lived in Scotland, and have an intimate knowledge of the attributes and peculiarities, humorous and otherwise, of the Scotch people; and to this class we can warmly commend the volume.

From Mr. John Milne.—'Clare Monro: the Story of a Mother and Daughter,' by Hannah Lynch. The author of this novel, we believe, has written several previous books, otherwise we might have supposed it to be the work of a novice. Certainly she has not the power to deal in a convincing matter with the material of her story. Clare Monro discovers that she is not actually entitled to the name she bears, her mother having in past years, when in Venice, had a lover in the person of a good-looking young artist. This fact is held to account for Clare's peculiar penchant for Italy—a country she has never visited—even the picture of a gondola inspiring a feeling of dreamy remembrance. Again, when the painter, now a man of position and renown, makes his re-appearance on the scene, she is struck by her marked resemblance to him. Eventually she tackles her mother on the question, and the truth is confessed. Poor Mrs. Monro! our sympathy goes out to her, for she seems to feel her position acutely, so much so that she glides into a room 'softly, apprehensively, as if in compromise with invisible spirits.' However, the sensitive Clare is unable to bear the secret knowledge of possessing a name to which she is not entitled, and she requests her father at once to find her a husband (which he has promised to do) so that she may escape from the loathed deception. The story is full of improbable incidents which the writer has rather intensified than concealed.

From Mr. Frank Murray, Derby.—'A Bibliography of Austin Dobson,' attempted by Francis Edwin Murray. Mr. Murray's modesty in using the word 'attempted' is commendable, but scarcely we think necessary. As a matter of fact, his little work achieves a high measure of success. It is divided into three parts, the first dealing with the titles of the first issues, the second containing an account of Mr. Dobson's literary career, the third supplying a list (necessarily incomplete) of the different periodicals to which Mr. Dobson has contributed since 1864, and the fourth giving an alphabetical list of titles of pieces in verse and prose with first lines of the former, and references to the several books and magazines in which they are found. Mr. Murray has evidently expended no slight amount of painstaking labour on this little volume, and he may fairly be congratulated on the satisfactory result of his efforts.

From Mr. John Murray.—'A Gentleman,' by the Hon. Mrs. Walter R. D. Forbes. Mrs. Forbes's novel, good as it is, suffers from being a little too high-toned. All the characters are of the approved society pattern, and their conversation is regulated on approved epigrammatic lines. Too much of this is apt to become wearisome, and the reader ere long has the impression that they are showing themselves off for his benefit, while the plot of the story has been forgotten. Nor is it always clever. '"A man in love," said the Marchesa, "is a bore." "Quite so. And a woman?" "I have never met one," replied the Marchesa.' This is a fair specimen of the 'smart' talk lavishly scattered throughout the book, and the reader can judge for himself of its brilliancy. A thoroughly plebeian character, vulgar but refreshingly honest and natural, would have been an immense advantage to the narrative as affording variety and contrast. At present the only relief is caused by a species of court jester, one Sir Vincent Fleming, who makes cynical sententious remarks when a kindly opening is afforded him by the rest of the fine personages, and has a habit of suddenly striking into the conversation from behind a chair or other unexpected entrance, which is quite in accordance with the best traditions of the courtly profession. The quality of his wit may be gauged by the following quotation: '"I believe," said Sir Vincent, "that most women marry again in order to buy a second trousseau with all the experience derived from the first."' After this we are not surprised to find that he was a great frequenter of afternoon tea-parties, and no doubt aided largely in keeping the ball of trivial conversation rolling. However, it is not of such material as this that the good novel is built up, and Mrs. Forbes shows in other directions that such excrescence is due rather to an error of judgment than any incapability of dealing effectively with her situations when they arise. The interest of the narrative sensibly quickens towards the close, and with the transference of the scene to Australia we cut ourselves adrift from most of these fashionable personages, though the method to some extent remains. Eventually the poor mother who has toiled as a Bond Street dressmaker under an assumed name in order that her son may take rank as 'a gentleman' has the pleasure of seeing him an honoured and distinguished man, married to the daughter of a peer, but she herself is exiled in Paris. Which hardly seems as it ought to be, and very few women, we may say, would stand it.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.—'Australasia.' The majority of the papers comprised in this volume were given originally as lectures in the Sunday Afternoon Course at the South Place Institute, Finsbury, during the years 1895–98, the object being to afford 'trustworthy information concerning the various colonies, settlements, and countries scattered over the world which go to form the whole known as the "British Empire."' Among the experts on Australian matters whose contributions are here reproduced are the Hon. Sir J. A. Cockburn (who also supplies an introduction), Sir William C. F. Robinson, the Hon. W. P. Reeves, Mr. James Bonwick, Mr. Charles Shortt Dicken, Mr. E. Jerome Dyer, Mr. G. Collins Levey, and Mr. T. H. Hatton Richards, who respectively deal with the subjects of South Australia, Western Australia, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, Tasmania, and British New Guinea. Outside questions, so to speak, are dealt with by Mr. G. Wilson Hall, Mr. F. G. Aflalo, Mrs. Hirst Alexander, and Mr. Harry B. Vogel in their papers on Australian Aboriginals, Australian Fisheries, the Women of Australasia, and the Maories. 'The Beginnings of an Australian Literature' is discussed by Mr. Arthur Patchett Martin, who brushes on one side the contention that because Mrs. Humphry Ward, of purely English lineage, happens by accident of birth to have been born in Tasmania she is therefore to be counted among Australian authors. As a matter of fact, she was brought to England from Hobart, where she was born, at the early age of five years, and her novels are in no sense descriptive of Australian life. From what we have said it will be seen that the contributors to this volume have charge of a large number of highly interesting subjects, and we may add that their treatment on the whole is worthy of the occasion. Readers will gather many valuable ideas and much useful information from a perusal of these pages. The value of the volume—which forms, we may mention, the fourth issue of the 'British Empire' series—is further enhanced by two excellent maps.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Thomas Henry Huxley: a Sketch of his Life and Work,' by P. C. Mitchell. The Life of Huxley recently published by his son is of course the standard authority on its subject, but it may well be supplemented on all library shelves by this excellent little work from the pen of Mr. Mitchell. The book is written with skill and knowledge, and within its two hundred and eighty pages is compressed not only a lucid account of Huxley's singularly interesting career, but an able appreciation of his work as a man of science. Without further going into its merits, we heartily recommend the volume as an intelligent and well-informed study of one of the most prominent of our recent men of science. We should add that it is embellished by some well-reproduced portraits.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Adventures of a Journalist,' by Herbert Cadett. Since newspapers took up the elucidation of crime—not always, it may be remarked, to the advantage of the accused person—private investigation has become quite a fashionable journalistic pursuit, and this volume records the exciting experiences of a clever member of the craft. The work, however, is not entirely made up of detective stories, but also contains an account of the adventures of the hero as a war correspondent. It is very interesting throughout—in short, an admirable volume for after-dinner consumption.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'How we kept the Flag Flying: the Story of the Siege of Ladysmith,' by Donald Macdonald. Illustrated. Books about the war in South Africa threaten to become as wearisome as the conflict itself. Mr. Macdonald represented the Melbourne Argus with the forces under General White, and his narrative of the early battles and the siege of Ladysmith is pretty much like the narratives of other correspondents. The book is not without its vivid passages, but in the glut of volumes of a similar kind we fear the work excites but a languid interest. The illustrations are poor.

New Editions.—Mr. Thomas Murby has issued a new edition—the fifth—of his 'Inorganic Chemistry — Non-Metallic and Metallic Elements,' by Raphael Meldola. This, with sections on inorganic analysis, laws of chemistry, chemical action, &c., has been revised to date by Mr. J. Castell Evans, who has introduced several improvements while in no way impairing the original scheme of the book. It now constitutes an extremely serviceable manual.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

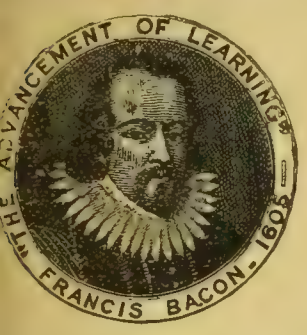
IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the



Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ..	8*s.* 6*d.*
„ Six Months ditto ditto	4*s.* 6*d.*
„ Three Months ditto ditto	2*s.* 6*d.*
To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage	11*s.* 0*d.*

Will be Glad to have the Offer of RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS of any Description; also FINE MEZZOTINTS AND COLOURED ENGRAVINGS.
English Poetry printed before 1660. Elizabethan Literature.
Old Plays prior to 1700. Mezzotint Engravings in fine state.
Coloured Engravings of Bartolozzi School.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE, July 27, 1899.

THE FOURTH EDITION OF

JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND NEW QUESTIONS (with Answers).

Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 460 pp. price 4s.

In issuing a Fourth Edition of this valuable work, the Publishers would direct the attention of teachers not only to the many unique features which render it so superior as a text-book for Middle and Upper Forms, Candidates for Examinations, and Students in Training, but to the addition and inclusion of over One Thousand new questions from Oxford and Cambridge Papers and other sources, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES, and to the fact that the work 'contains a great deal that they may search all existing text-books for in vain.'

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.'—ISABELLA MULVANY, B.A., Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity. No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.'—DAVID ROSS, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D., Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.

H.M. INSPECTORS AND TEACHERS:

'I will recommend it as superior to any text-book at present in use.'
'It has no rival.'
'I have learned much from it that I never saw before.'
'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'
'We have had no failure in public examinations since using your book.'

'We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.' EDUCATIONAL TIMES.
'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—MORNING POST.
'It is one of the clearest, completest, and most concise books of arithmetic produced within recent years.'—NORTHERN WHIG.
'This is one of the very best arithmetic books we have seen.'—ABERDEEN JOURNAL.

IMPERIAL COMPETITION

JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'The series forms a welcome contrast to the tame and ordinary drawing book. . . . Drawing . . . —JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.
'An excellent . . . —EDUCATIONAL TIMES.
'A series of exceptional merit. . . . We know of no similar attempt to popularise high art.' SCHOOLMASTER.
'An excellent and highly practical series . . . very comprehensive.' SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.
'The carefully designed, artistically executed, in every respect excellent—eminently fitted to develop the artistic faculties.'—EDUCATIONAL NEWS.
'Serve admirably as a relief from Code grinding. . . . Splendid course of drawing.' TEACHERS' AID.
'Have seen nothing like them, can most confidently recommend them.' CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.
'Must be productive of the best possible results.'—NATIONAL TEACHER.
'The series for artistic excellence or for cheapness has no superior.'—CHILDREN'S MISTRESS.
'Should be seen by every Headmaster who makes drawing a subject in his school.' LITERARY WORLD.

Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

Each Volume containing upwards of 200 Illustrations in Photogravure and half-tone, together with Six Etchings by PH. ZILCKEN.

Edited by MAX ROOSES, Curator of Plantin-Moretus Museum, Antwerp.

Translated by F. KNOWLES.

In each of these Volumes is given some account of the Life and Work of twelve Representative Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century, with Reproductions of their Pictures from Originals selected by the Artists themselves for the purpose. The aim of these books is to give specimens of the talent of Dutch Painters of the present day, for Holland has reason to be proud of the work done by her Artists during the latter half of this century. The work is edited by the well-known Art Connoisseur, Max Rooses, the Curator of the Plantin-Moretus Museum in Antwerp, and the Biographical Notices have been supplied by different writers selected for their special knowledge of the subject. In the production of the Etchings, Photogravures, and other Illustrations, the Publishers have had the assistance of the well-known Dutch Etcher, Philip Zilcken. The Edition is strictly limited for England and America.

'The book, besides being pleasant to glance through, is a serious contribution to the history of art.'—Times.

'No more sumptuous work of the kind could be desired. . . . makes a table book of exceptional interest and value.'—Globe.

'The materials are here for a far wider appreciation of Dutch Art than has yet been possible for the average English student.'—St. James's Gazette.

'One rather wonders how on earth it can be produced for a couple of guineas.'—M. A. P.

'Lavish and artistic illustrations make the book interesting to the merest lay reader, whilst for the man or woman of cosmopolitan artistic tastes it is a valuable contribution to the art history of our own times, a work to cherish and to read more than once.'—Speaker.

Demy 4to. in 1 vol. cloth extra, price 30s. net.

300 pp. Text, and 450 Illustrations from Photographs.

Burma.

By MAX and BERTHA FERRARS.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'Well over four hundred illustrations . . . there is hardly one which has only the merit of prettiness, or is without definite purpose.'—Standard.
'Equally artistic and instructive.'—Athenæum.
'A remarkably interesting and beautiful book. . . . We have never seen a book in which the camera was used to better advantage.'—Spectator.
'We have no word but praise for this charming series of nearly five hundred illustrations.'—Homeward Mail.
'In the whole of our experience we have not come across a book so well illustrated by means of photography as is this fine work on Burma. . . . One of the best books of the year.'—British Journal of Photography.
'Is an almost ideal example of the result of photographic record and survey of the very best kind. The variety, interest, and general high quality of the pictures speak well for the photographic ability of the authors.'—Photogram.

Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.

December 14, 1900.

'Gray says very justly that learning never should be encouraged, it only draws out fools from their obscurity; and, you know, I have always thought a running footman as meritorious a being as a learned man. Why is there more merit in having travelled one's eyes over so many reams of paper than in having carried one's legs over so many acres of ground?' Thus wrote Horace Walpole from his town house in Arlington Street on May 6, 1755, to Dr. Richard Bentley. This was rather a bon mot than seriously meant, even when it was penned. Certainly, at the present day, it would be difficult to discourage learning, except amongst the idle, who have but little inclination for it. According to the Seer of Chelsea, the people of these islands were mostly fools some fifty years ago, so that on Gray's system the learned would be few. Perhaps there are no fools now. Since 1850 the schoolmaster has been very much more abroad; but, unfortunately, without much practical result, as we gather from Mr. Asquith's speech before the Leeds Chamber of Commerce on Nov. 23. Mr. Asquith, contrasting the prospects which lay before British trade when that Chamber was born in 1851, and the results realised in the half century which has followed, spoke of the high expectations called forth by the Great Exhibition of 1851, which was to inaugurate a new era of international concord; and, referring to the Chinese crisis, said: 'We hardly seem to be as yet within a measurable distance of the ideal to which the author of "Locksley Hall" had looked forward;' and asked, 'How had we been faring during the last fifty years?' He admitted that Board of Trade optimism might show by figures that our national wealth and trade had reached an unprecedented figure; but the question still remains, Are we holding our own?

He then went on to say that, in answering this question, we were now confronted with two new factors—the competition of Germany and of the United States of America. 'The rise of Germany into the front rank of the commercial powers of the world was,' he said, 'the most remarkable illustration that was to be found of the practical value of education, organisation, and concentration.' . . . 'The same sleepless industry, the same tenacity of purpose, the same training and moulding of intelligence for a specific end which had given the German in turn first military supremacy and then political unity, had enabled him to overtake, and, if we did not mend our ways, would enable him to outrun, his more favoured rivals in the industrial struggle of the world. What was the lesson which this experience ought to teach us here in England?' . . . 'The answer to this question,' he said, 'could not be better presented than it had been in Lord Rosebery's address to the students of Glasgow, and through and beyond them to all who loved and served the British Empire. For the business of the Empire in all its departments we wanted thoroughly trained and equipped business men, and, paradoxical as it sounded, nowhere was it more urgently wanted than in the field of business, for business was a question of education.'

'Let any man,' said he, 'contrast the magnificent educational apparatus of Continental States, of which the humblest boy in those countries might make use, with our own scanty, slovenly, unscientific, and ill-organised system or want of it, and he would no longer be at a loss to understand why England was handicapped in the race for commercial supremacy.' And he urged upon the British Chamber of Commerce to press on Governments and Parliaments the urgency of creating and maintaining a properly equipped system of commercial and technical schools. There can be no question as to the practical value and wisdom of Mr. Asquith's advice, albeit the learning may not be of the same nature as that Horace Walpole had in his mind, which was doubtless confined to the study of the Latin and Greek classics.

On the same night the President-elect of the British Association, Professor A. W. Rucker, when distributing the prizes to the students of Bradford Technical College urged that scientific and technical study should be relieved and aided by the study of modern languages. Science was becoming more international. This year a scientific confederation of the world had been formed, and the new century would see the beginning of an international catalogue of scientific literature. He considered that a knowledge of modern languages should replace that of Latin; and insisted on the immediate, pressing, and vital importance for our national welfare that scientific knowledge should not only be more widely spread but also that the scientific method should be more widely applied to industry.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A work of timely interest is announced by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. It has been written by Chang Chih Tung, China's most progressive Viceroy, with the object of enlightening his fellow-countrymen, and has reached a circulation in China of not less than a million copies. The English translation is entitled 'China's Only Hope,' and is just ready. Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier also announce a work entitled 'The Siege in Peking: China against the World,' by Dr. W. A. P. Martin, who is one of the few Europeans who know China as the Chinese know it. For the last thirty years he has been resident in Peking, in the service of the Chinese Government, as a Professor in the Imperial College. In 1898, however, the Emperor offered him the Presidency of the Imperial University, a post which he held until a few months ago.

The Delegates of the Clarendon Press will publish, in the autumn of 1901, a facsimile, by the collotype process, of the 'First Folio of Shakespeare.' An absolutely correct reproduction has long been demanded by Shakespeare students. The Chatsworth copy has, by the generous permission of the Duke of Devonshire, been deposited on loan in the Bodleian Library for the purpose. Mr. Sidney Lee will contribute a brief introduction, and will give as full a list as practicable of all known copies of the First Folio with bibliographical details. Owners of copies of the First Folio who are not already in communication with Mr. Lee are requested to communicate with him, care of the Clarendon Press, Oxford.

The biographies of Lord Roberts threaten to be numerous. Among those already announced are a full account of his career and civil and military work by Captain W. E. Cairns, already well known for his critical articles on the war, which Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are to publish, and a sixpenny life, intended for the masses, for which Messrs. Methuen & Co. are responsible. The latter book is by Mr. J. S. Fletcher.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. are publishing a work by Professor Bright, of Oxford, entitled 'The Age of the Fathers.' The author continues studies which have already furnished us with lives of St. Athanasius, St. Chrysostom, and St. Augustine.

Yet another war book. Messrs. Methuen are publishing a narrative of the adventures in South Africa of the City Imperial Volunteers. The book, which is entitled 'One Thousand Miles with the C.I.V.,' is written by Lance-Corporal J. Barclay Lloyd, who was attached to the Cyclist section.

The publishing business of Messrs. Duckworth & Co. will in future be carried on by Mr. Duckworth and Mr. George H. Milsted, who has been associated with him for some little time. Mr. A. R. Waller has retired. The style of the firm remains unchanged.

'The Army from Within' is the title of a new book by the author of 'An Absent-minded War,' which Messrs. Sands & Co. announce for immediate publication. It is written to supply an outline sketch of the organisation of the British army, and to supplement that by more detailed information on the mode of life, pay, and prospects of both officers and men, but more particularly with the object of enabling the general public to form an opinion as to the merits and demerits of the various schemes of army reform now so much discussed.

On the 19th a literary supplement, edited by Mr. Latey, will be presented with the Sketch, and will contain matter of interest alike to members of the book trade and the general reader. By the way, although this has not been a particularly good season for the ordinary Christmas number, yet some issues have done remarkably well. Among the brightest and most successful of these is the Christmas number of the Sketch, which seems to be unaffected by the general depression.

An exhibition of bindings, paper, and educational works, for which the Oxford University Press recently gained three Grands Prix in Paris, was opened on Wednesday the 12th at the University Warehouse, Amen Corner, Paternoster Row. The public will be admitted daily on presentation of visiting card or bookseller's introduction until Friday in next week, and also in the week beginning on the 31st inst., but it will not be possible to effect any purchases except through the ordinary trade channels.

In announcing a translation of the poems of Hafiz by Mr. John Payne, and claiming that no other 'complete or in any way adequate translation either in prose or verse' exists of the work of the Persian poet, the secretary of the Villon Society has no doubt forgotten that in April 1898 Dr. Walter Leaf published, through Mr. Grant Richards, 'Versions from Hafiz: an Essay in Persian Metre.'

Under the title of Man, a monthly record of anthropological science, the Council of the Anthropological Institute proposes to establish a monthly record of progress in the various branches of the study of Man. Its contents will include contributions to physical anthropology, ethnography, and psychology; the study of language, and the earlier stages of civilisation, industry, and art; and the history of social institutions and of moral and religious ideas.

A second series of 'Vagabond Songs and Ballads of Scotland,' edited by Robert Ford, is announced by Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley. The first series of these songs, it may be mentioned, published two years ago, is out of print.

A work, entitled 'Christian Egypt, Past, Present, and Future,' by the Rev. Montague Fowler, M.A., will be published early in January by the Church Newspaper Co. Probably many people are unaware of the part which Christianity played in Egypt in the early centuries of the Christian era, or that the Coptic Church is the existing representative of the Church of Alexandria, of which St. Athanasius, St. Cyril, and other famous early 'Fathers' were such notable representatives. Much that is obscure to the average mind on these matters is, we are assured, to be made clear by Mr. Fowler's exposition of the vicissitudes of the Church on the banks of the Nile. The work will deal with the formation of an independent bishopric for Egypt, which has already received the consent of Lord Cromer and the concurrence of the British Government.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have in hand two theological works. One is by Professor George Adam Smith, and deals with the subject of 'Modern Criticism and Preaching of the Old Testament,' being the outcome to a large extent of a series of lectures which the Professor delivered at Yale; while the second takes the form of a treatise by Principal Fairbairn treating of the philosophy of the Christian religions. Neither work will be published until after Christmas.

Messrs. George Bell & Sons have added three further volumes to their 'Chiswick Shakespeare.' The contents are respectively 'Antony and Cleopatra,' 'Coriolanus,' and 'Much Ado about Nothing.' Each volume is supplied with a concise introduction and notes by Mr. John Dennis, and there are the usual 'up-to-date' illustrations of Mr. Byam Shaw. The binding, paper, and printing of these little volumes remain excellent, and those who would possess a really artistic edition of the dramatist's works in a handy and convenient form could scarcely do better than purchase this series.

An abridged edition of Mr. Sidney Lee's well-known 'Life of William Shakespeare' has been issued by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. under the title of 'Shakespeare's Life and Work.' It is chiefly intended for the use of students, and we can imagine no work that should more adequately fulfil the duties of instructor and guide. It practically supplies the utmost information in regard to the great dramatist's achievements and career in a minimum amount of space.

Mr. William Andrews, author of 'Curiosities of the Church,' will commence in an early issue of Church Bells a series of articles under the title of 'Illustrated Church Notes.' The papers will afterwards be reproduced in book form. In the last issue of this serial Mr. Andrews writes on 'Christmas Observances: Past and Present,' and in the Nottinghamshire Guardian and other newspapers he contributes a long seasonable paper on 'Christmas Fare of King and Subject.'

With the new year and century the Art Journal will begin a new series, and though in the main its present character will be retained, several changes will be introduced. The alterations will be outwardly marked by the use of a new wrapper, specially designed by Lewis F. Day, who will in future also write or supervise the contents devoted to the decorative arts and crafts. In the new series of the Art Journal attention will also be specially devoted to etchings.

The Board of Education has decided to open the Exhibition of Modern Illustrations on Monday, January 7 next, in the galleries of the Indian section of the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington. A private view will be held on Saturday, January 5.

On the 4th inst. Mr. C. T. Craig and Mr. C. T. Jacobi were admitted to the livery of the Stationers' Company &c.

Mr. Fisher Unwin publishes this week in book form Mrs. Craigie's play 'The Wisdom of the Wise,' which is now being played at the St. James's Theatre.

A new volume in the 'Tool Basket' series will be shortly issued entitled, 'The Evangelist's Wallet,' containing many outlines of sermons, published by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

A very inviting programme has been issued by the conductors of Bubbles for the coming year. One of the principal features of this magazine for young people, we may mention, is that all the whole-page illustrations (of which there are sixteen every month) are in colours. Serial and short stories, popular science papers, natural history articles, puzzles, prize competitions, and the like, form a feast of good things that we are sure no youthful reader can resist.

'The North Pole, the Great Ice Age, and the Deluge,' is the title of a pamphlet issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. The author, Mr. W. B. Galloway, M.A., has evidently the courage of his convictions, and he enforces his views in regard to the Great Ice Age with clearness and cogency. The work should be of much interest to men of science concerned with the subject of which it treats.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Remarkable as is the success achieved by the Polish writer Henrik Sienkiewicz—to which his masterly romance 'Quo Vadis' has mainly contributed—still more phenomenal is the information to hand from Russia concerning the approaching celebration of his literary jubilee, which is definitely fixed to take place at Warsaw on December 22, with very great solemnity. A thanksgiving service will first of all be celebrated at the Roman Catholic church of the Holy Cross, from whence the writer will proceed to the Town Hall, in the great hall of which will be solemnly presented to him the deed of gift of the manor of Oblengorsk, which has been purchased by the subscriptions of his fellow-countrymen and admirers. The deed is engrossed on parchment in the style of ancient letters patent, and accompanied by several volumes, richly bound, containing the signatures of the numerous donors. In the evening a gala performance will take place at the Grand Theatre, when 'The Marriage of Pan Zagloba,' a comedy written by Sienkiewicz himself, will be performed. Several foreign literary deputations are expected at Warsaw. Count Adam Krassinski, a Polish magnate has presented to the author a large painting by Sémiradsky representing the Sword Dance, as an ornament for his future residence at Oblengorsk. It is seldom a living writer is so honoured.

M. Émile Zola's new romance, 'Travail,' the second of the series of four novels with a purpose called by him the Four Gospels, will appear in the Paris journal, L'Aurore. A preliminary announcement styles it: 'A touching picture of the reorganisation of Labour as it is slowly being elaborated in our old moribund society. After a study of labour as it is to-day, sad, wretched, dishonoured (sic), the writer shows it restored to honour, the unique source of health, joy, and riches; and he concludes with the vision of a future society, where the communion of men and peoples will be made in glorified work, becoming the very law of life, creator and regulator of the world. So the story puts upon the stage the bitter struggle we see going on between capital and labour, masters and servants. As slavery formerly disappeared, so paid servants must also disappear to make way for the foundation of the society of to-morrow. It is this the novelist foresees, and relates in a series of tragic and impassioned scenes in the two-fold medium of the middle-class masters and the workers of iron and steel. Quite a crowd of characters, in which are summarised the types of the present crisis, jostle and crush each other, moving towards the inevitable dénouement, which is the triumph of the idea of justice and peace.'

After more than three years of litigation, the will of Edmond de Goncourt, instituting his Academy, has been validated. The only formality still necessary to its existence is for the Council of State to declare the scheme one of public utility. Some time, however, must yet elapse before the Academy can be in working order, probably from twelve to fifteen months.

M. H. Le Soudier announces for early publication a second edition of his excellent 'Bibliographie Française,' which made its first appearance in 1896, and achieved so remarkable a success. This new edition, which is thoroughly revised and brought up to date, will contain several catalogues not included in the issue of 1896, and is so greatly enlarged that, whereas the first edition was complete in six volumes, the second will form ten volumes, and the total number of pages will be about 9,000.

A new and valuable contribution to the knowledge of Africa is announced by Plon, Nourrit & Co. in 'Mission de Bonchamps: Vers Fachoda à la rencontre de la Mission Marchand à travers l'Ethiopie, par Charles Michel, second de la Mission,' with a map and engravings from photographs by the author and from drawings by Maurice Potter. The same firm has just ready 'Mes grandes Chasses dans l'Afrique centrale, par Édouard Foa'; and 'Au Pays-Bleus: Alpes Maritimes, par Henri Morris,' illustrated with 450 phototype engravings from nature and an aquarelle by D. Dellepiave.

WORDS THAT ARE OVERWORKED.

A writer in an American paper has been calling attention to a number of words which he thinks are overworked and deserve a rest. By way of prelude he remarks, what of course every student and reader of intelligence knows, 'that the English language is wonderfully rich in synonyms and in words suited to the expression of various shades of meaning. There are very few thoughts for which the exact word cannot be found in our language. There is no necessity for making words,' he adds in the vein of a professor of rhetoric, 'do duty for others simply because some persons are not acquainted with the others, and some are too indolent to seek for them. The fight against the looseness practised by these persons must be made because there are many who are ready and eager to argue that usage justifies almost anything in language.'

The degradation of the language, we are told, is due to the ascendency of the newspaper. In the haste of getting out a daily paper many niceties of speech are neglected, and as the largest number of readers of English are the readers of newspapers, looseness in the employment of words is easily spread. It does not take long for the vast body of newspaper readers to establish a wide usage of words in incorrect senses, and this is the usage which is almost invariably defended by those to whom usage is a law of style.

Just at present the word 'develop' is being worked to death in doing duty for other words which are by no means unfamiliar. 'The inquiry did not develop any new facts' is one of the common explanations of the time. It would be remarkable, says the critic, if an inquiry could do such a thing. It might disclose or reveal, or bring to light, or discover new facts, but it would not be in its power to develop them. The excellent word 'disclose' has by this misuse of 'develop' been turned out of doors, while the use of 'discover' in its primary meaning has almost entirely ceased.

Poor old 'transpire' has again come to the front as meaning 'occur' or 'take place,' which it has no business to mean at all. A thing, as all scholars know, transpires when it becomes known, when it leaks out. Many things happen without transpiring. One who wishes to say that a thing took place might almost as well say that it 'perspired' as to say that 'it transpired.' These are two examples of that looseness in diction which threatens to give the supposed sanctity of usage to things radically wrong. It is open to sticklers for accuracy in speech to question the authority of usage of this sort. Finally, an appeal is made to lovers of the splendid English tongue, which is our heritage, to oppose those who misuse it.

IN HONOUR OF THE GAEL.

All Celtic scholars, students, and lovers of folk-lore owe a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Alexander Carmichael. For twoscore and four years he has been collecting the ballads, metrical tales, and incantations of the Highlands and Islands, and now presents the results of his labour in two handsome volumes. From first to last it has been a labour of love. From Arran to Caithness, from Perth to St Kilda, he has gone familiarly among the people taking down from their recitation a vast mass of oral lore, which must have perished from the earth but for his knowledge and zeal. He has explored the Highlands generally, but the greater part of the rich harvest has been gathered among the Western Isles, for in these the Highland people still retain most of their primitive lore, rites, and customs. But even in the remote islands the ancient legends and manners are disappearing. 'We are all passing away,' says Heine in his introduction to 'The Gods in Exile,' 'men, gods, creeds, and legends. It is a pious work to preserve the latter from oblivion. Yes, creeds are fleeting and traditions too; they are vanishing like burnt-out tapers, not only in enlightened lands but in the most midnight places of the world.' To this pious task of rescue Mr. Carmichael has applied himself with timely zeal and a most signal success.

In an admirable and lucid introduction he tells how the matter which makes up the two volumes was collected. 'Each crofting-town land has its story-tellers, its literary coterie. The stranger, having been invited to take a seat by the fire in a crofters' hut,' asks the houseman to tell a story. The tale is full of incident, action, and pathos. It is told simply yet graphically, and at times dramatically—compelling the undivided attention of the listener. At the pathetic scenes and distressful events the bosoms of the women may be seen to heave and their silent tears to fall. Truth overcomes craft, skill conquers strength, and bravery is rewarded.' Thus through the winter evenings a sort of Arabian Nights entertainment constantly goes on. Mr. Carmichael was a frequent guest at such gatherings in different parts of the north and west, and took down from human lips much legend, song, and story that had never been committed to print. 'Whatever,' he says, 'be the value of this work, it is genuine folk-lore, taken down from the lips of men and women, no part being taken down from books. It is the product of far-away thinking, come down on the long stream of time.' Mr. Carmichael guarantees the genuiness of the collection; we speak with confidence of its value as the most important contribution to Celtic literature made for many years. Mr. Carmichael appeared just in time. In a brilliant article in the Nineteenth Century Miss Fiona MacLeod calls him the last of the Celtic chroniclers, and we fear she is right. Our gratitude for his long devotion to a single noble object is therefore the deeper. Whatever comes or goes, whatever may be the fate of the Gaelic language or the Celtic people, this magnificent tribute to the Celtic genius must remain.

It consists, as we have hinted, of Invocations, Incantations, Chants of Christmas and other seasons, Songs of Labour, and miscellaneous pieces, illustrated and illuminated by a large number of notes of inestimable value. These notes are indeed, in their fulness and their critical insight, an education in the literature of the Gael. Mr. Carmichael writes out of an inexhaustible knowledge; yet, full as he is of his subject, his notes are nowhere redundant, nowhere inflated. As for the collection of songs, hymns, and folk lore they illustrate, that must be studied quietly and sympathetically to be appreciated. It breathes the very spirit of the Gael: it is full of enchantment, of tenderness, of awe, of mystery. In its grace and its charm it furnishes an ample justification of the claims of Renan and Arnold on behalf of Celtic literature. To Celtic scholars and students it is indispensable, and to Highlanders everywhere it will bring joy, not unmixed with tears. For it comes as the echo of a dying world, a world full of haunting beauty. We end as we began, by saying that to Mr. Carmichael all who take an interest in Celtic literature or in the manners and customs of the Highland people are under a debt of gratitude. Let them show it by purchasing and studying this superb work, a work which is at once a treasury of folk-lore and a monument of devotion. The two volumes are admirably produced by Messrs. Constable, so that outwardly as well as inwardly they will delight the heart of the real book-lover.

* 'Carmina Gadelica: Hymns and Incantations; with illustrative notes on words, rites, and customs dying and obsolete, orally collected in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, and translated into English, by Alexander Carmichael.' Edinburgh, printed for the author by T. & A. Constable, and sold by Norman MacLeod, 25 George IV. Bridge. 2 volumes.

THE PUBLISHER'S READER.

By Coulson Kernahan.

On Monday evening Mr. Coulson Kernahan delivered a brilliant lecture at the London Institution, before a large and enthusiastic audience.

In apologising for treating his subject from the humorous rather than from the serious standpoint, Mr. Kernahan contended that man is born, not—as physiologists tell us—with five senses, but with six. The sixth and greatest sense is, he contended, the sense of humour. Humour, he went on to say, is as common a component of life as oxygen gas is of our atmosphere. Humour is, in fact, the oxygen of life—the sweetener of all things and the preservative against decay; and for all the ills of a literary adviser's life, a sense of humour is the one unfailing panacea.

The literary adviser and the magazine editor, continued the lecturer, had much in common, for the magazine editor was only a literary adviser issued in monthly parts. Both go in continual fear of the rejected contributor. One lady whose MS. he had rejected was unable to see him at his publisher's; but she discovered at what hour he left his office, and to what station on the Underground Railway he then booked, and on two consecutive evenings waylaid him to beg him with tears in her eyes to reconsider his decision.

'On the third evening I capitulated,' said the lecturer. 'Not by accepting her MS.—oh, dear no! But by alighting, not at my usual station, but at the one preceding it, and so stealing homeward surreptitiously by a roundabout route, "shying" like a nervous horse at every advancing petticoat. Possibly you won't believe the story,' Mr. Kernahan went on. 'I am not sure that my own wife would have believed it had she seen me, on two consecutive evenings, in conversation with a strange and tearful lady, and called upon me to explain the very suspicious circumstances.' Mr. Kernahan has found a new name for the person who calls to see an editor and takes up the editorial time unnecessarily. 'Emerson wrote a poem which he called "The Visit." It begins:

Well, if a man calls to see me and takes thirty minutes to say what could very well be said in three, or if he sit there and talk and talk, and get on my nerves, I dub him a "Devastator."'

Once when Mr. Kernahan had a particularly heavy piece of work upon hand, he arranged with the clerk who sat in the room outside that when Mr. Kernahan was engaged with a visitor and a ruler was heard to drop in Mr. Kernahan's room, the clerk was to come in as if he had supposed Mr. Kernahan to be alone.

Then Mr. Kernahan would look up. 'What is it, Mr. Jones? Can't you see I'm engaged? Oh! it's a very important matter, is it? Not a minute to spare, isn't there? All right, I'll be with you directly. This lady was just going.'

'Exit the Devastator!' said Mr. Kernahan to his audience. 'A painless operation.'

In speaking of the numbers of letters received by every literary adviser—letters which constituted a ruinous claim upon one's time, Mr. Kernahan said that literary men and literary women who are not literary advisers suffer also from a multitude of letters. 'But,' commented the lecturer, 'you must remember that the majority of persons who write letters to Mr. Swinburne, to Mr. Lang, and to Mr. Kipling, do so generally because of their intense admiration for those distinguished authors' work. The men and women who write letters to us literary advisers do so because of their intense admiration for their own work, which is less gratifying to the recipient of their communications. One poor woman wrote to say that her son was threatened with softening of the brain. He had, she said, written a novel which she was told was dreadful rubbish, but she begged Mr. Kernahan to use his influence to get it accepted, as she hoped her son's health would be benefited by his having something to occupy what was left of his mind.'

In conclusion, the lecturer said that, in representing that evening a calling which counts or has counted among its members such men as Mr. George Meredith—at mention of whom everyone who loved what is great in literature must stand surely at 'Salute'—the late Mr. James Payn and Dr. Robertson Nicoll, he was reminded of a custom still prevalent at weddings, when the response to a toast of importance—that of 'The Bridesmaids'—falls into the hands of the youngest bachelor.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Sir,—If not too late, I should like to say a few words on the subject treated in Mr. Shaylor's letter, which appeared in your columns last month, on the 'get-up' of English publishers' books as compared with American, and the decadence of that of the former. When I say that I have been continuously engaged for twenty-five years in the production of books of all sorts for English publishers, it may fairly be assumed that I am not one of Byron's 'ready-made' critics. From boyhood I have been a 'reader of books.' Before I became engaged in the publisher's 'art' I concerned myself only with the author's—the soul rather than the body. Let us now consider the 'body.' For this the essentials are:—

1. Good paper.
2. Good type, well balanced.
3. Good printing.
4. Good and appropriate binding.

Not forgetting the artist and the engraver for illustrated books. Beyond these I know of no requisite for a well-produced book. Fashions in books—that is, eccentricities in shape or get-up—are cheap novelties that are beneath the dignity of an honourable profession. Mr. Shaylor speaks of 'monotony.' I cannot see how the word can be applied to the production of books, apart from the 'cheap novelties' referred to, unless it is the monotony of badness.

That the production of books in England has been deteriorating for many years past while it has been steadily improving in America are indisputable facts. The paper used generally in both countries is bad. It is much to be regretted that the paper-maker found that he could make paper of wood. Publishers' stationers find that the demand is for cheap paper, and they stock low qualities only. If you are extravagant and require a rag-paper, you must get it specially made. The Society of Arts some year or so ago discussed this question, and expressed some alarm, and well they might, for the longevity of books printed on this perishable substance. Let us, then, have good paper.

English type and the front rank of English book-printers are all that can be desired.

American type does not please my eye, and first-class book-printing cannot be obtained from linotype, so much used in the United States.

With regard to the materials used in binding it is different. American book cloths are far superior to English, and their brass binding stamps are better too. The binding itself is good in both countries. If I might be allowed the use of the word 'monotony,' I should apply it to the American flat-back for cloth books. I can admire a book in polished morocco with this style of back, but it is not to my liking for common use in cloth-bound books.

I am bound to admit that the American cover designs show more thought and appropriateness than ours, though wanting in refinement generally.

I now come to the subject of illustrations. What would Thomas Bewick think of the process block were he living? The wood engraver is very nearly if not quite extinct in England. In Germany there are still many good ones, and a few in America. We have plenty of good artists, but no engravers. We have therefore to go to the process block maker. The worst feature of the process half-tone block is that the printer requires for it a specially prepared paper of most objectionable qualities. I refer, of course, to coated papers. The American process blocks are in every respect far superior to ours. They are engraved by hand and vignetted very cleverly, and are better printed, possibly because the blocks are better.

In conclusion, I would lay stress on the desirability of better paper being used for books intended for the bookshelf. Wood pavement is all very well, but wood paper for books—no.

Yours faithfully,
George E. Lowe.

THE AGE OF NOVEL-WRITERS.

Ignoring his own practice, Mr. Rudyard Kipling has said that no man ought to attempt novel-writing until he had attained the age of forty—the inference being that before the end of his twoscore years no writer can have a sufficient knowledge of the world. We find, however, that novelists, like poets, develop young. As a writer in an American contemporary points out, in the field of the novel as well as of the drama (Shakespeare wrote Romeo and Juliet at twenty-seven) youthful precocity is apparent. Elizabeth Sheppard, the feminine Chatterton of the history of literature, wrote 'Charles Auchester' at sixteen. Victor Hugo wrote his first serious novel at twenty-one, and Charlotte Brontë was the same age when she gave us 'Jane Eyre.' Lord Lytton first achieved success with a novel at twenty-five. At the same age Goethe had written 'The Sorrows of Werther,' and was for ever famous. Turgenieff was one year older when his first novel brought him into prominence. Dickens wrote 'Oliver Twist' at twenty-six. Frances Burney was no older when she helped to originate a new form of fiction in 'Evelina.' Smollett was only twenty-seven when he produced 'Roderick Random,' and George Sand wrote her immortal 'Indiana' at the same age. Charles Kingsley was still in his twenties when he wrote 'Yeast.' Many of our most treasured novels were written when their authors were little past the thirty-year mark. Stevenson wrote 'Treasure Island' when he was only thirty-three. Thackeray wrote 'Vanity Fair' at thirty-eight, and Mrs. Stowe 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' at thirty-nine. Disraeli, Trollope, Reade, Cooper, Jane Austen, and Goldsmith—all these gave their best work to the presses before they were forty. The same is true of Daudet, Balzac, Dumas (père) and Tolstoi. As a matter of fact, there are only a half-dozen or so of novelists whom time has stamped as really great craftsmen who did not show the full maturity of power before the age of twoscore years. Scott did not, but Scott before that age had produced his best poetical work. George Eliot did not, reversing the law that women mature mentally at an earlier age than men. Neither did Hawthorne. These are exceptions, however, that may be cited only to prove the rule.

PUBLISHERS OF TO-DAY.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Among the great publishing houses of Scotland none has a higher reputation than that of Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons, Parkside, Edinburgh. The business belongs to Mr. T. A. Nelson and his younger brother, Mr. I. T. Nelson, but is at present carried on by trustees under the management of Mr. G. M. Brown, the newly elected M.P. for Central Edinburgh. The firm owes its origin to Mr. Thomas Nelson, who was born in 1780 at Trosk, a few miles east of Stirling. Mr. Nelson received the early part of his training in a publishing house in London, from which he removed to Edinburgh; and there, in a bookstore stocked chiefly with second-hand books, he laid the foundation of the large and flourishing business which is now conducted in the stately range of offices, warerooms, and workshops under the shadow of Arthur's Seat, and in great distributing centres in London and New York. The establishment of a bookstore in a picturesque tenement at the Bowhead, Lawnmarket, marks the first progressive step in Mr. Nelson's career. To bookselling he soon added publishing. Applying the process of stereotyping to the production of cheap editions of popular works of established repute, he issued such books as 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' Baxter's 'Saint's Rest,' 'MacEwen on the Types,' &c., at prices within the reach of even the peasant and the artisan. Nor were the tastes of those who cared for another class of reading neglected. 'Robinson Crusoe,' 'Rasselas,' 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' Goldsmith's 'Essays,' and 'The Deserted Village,' along with other popular favourites, followed. The business gradually expanded until the Bowhead establishment no longer sufficed for the accommodation required. From Bowhead the works were removed to Castle Hill, and from Castle Hill to Hope Park. But Mr. Nelson's health had broken down, and the reins of management passed into the hands of his eldest son, Mr. William Nelson, and soon after Mr. Thomas Nelson, junr., was admitted as partner. The Hope Park establishment, so far as printing, publishing, and binding are concerned, is spoken of by Mr. Bremner in his 'Industries of Scotland' as 'the most extensive house in Scotland.' The Hope Park epoch, lasting thirty-five years, was brought to an abrupt termination. Fire broke out in the works about three o'clock in the morning of the 10th of April, 1878, and in a few hours the building was a pile of smoking ruins. The stereotype plates, woodcuts, and electrotypes escaped uninjured; everything else was destroyed. The loss amounted to close on £100,000. New premises were speedily erected at Parkside; and here, in buildings one story in height, some six or seven hundred workers find daily employment. Everything, from the setting of the types to the issue of the bound and illustrated volume, is done on the premises.

Coming to the publications of the firm we note first Nelson's 'Royal Readers.' These may be looked on as the pioneers and models of all subsequent reading-books at home and in all English-speaking colonies. They were edited and practically written by Mr. Thomas Nelson. As far back as 1851, specimen pages of the early books in the Royal School Series were printed in the Great Exhibition on the first rotary press printing from a web of paper—the invention of Mr. Thomas Nelson himself. The merit of this invention, it may be noted in passing, was strangely overlooked at the time; and it was not till about twenty years later that the idea was put to practical use in the Walter Newspaper Machine. The 'Royal Readers' were followed by 'New Royal Readers,' 'Royal Star Readers,' and 'Royal Crown Readers,' but the original series is still selling in large numbers. The 'Royal Crown Readers' have been received most favourably by the teaching profession, and by the educational press throughout the country. Compiled upon a sound principle, varied and interesting in matter, and beautifully illustrated, 'among school-readers,' said their editor, with a twinkle in his eye, 'they are second only to the "Royal Princess Readers" which we are now bringing out. We are sparing no pains to make this set of readers the most attractive yet published.' The lessons, it may be added, are carefully selected, graded, and edited; the type is beautifully clear; paper and binding are of the highest quality; and the illustrations are numerous, many being coloured pictures produced by the three-colour process. It is, however, in their new series of 'Children's Coloured Picture Books' that this process is most largely employed.

Messrs. Nelson by no means confine themselves to the publication of reading-books. Grammars, geographies, histories, arithmetics, copy-books, drawing-books, manuals, indeed, of all the 'ologies' required in the schoolroom by a well meaning but sometimes misguided 'Department,' are also issued by the firm. One of the most notable features during recent years in the development of the business has been the production of a large and comprehensive stock of wall sheets for teaching and testing purposes. Thus, sets of object-lesson sheets illustrating plant and animal life &c. are issued in connected series. They are models of what such pictures and diagrams should be. Again, there are several series of wall maps, each set forming a wall atlas dealing with the geography of a given country. Of very high artistic finish and educational completeness, these sheets are a most welcome addition to school apparatus. Of the standard books for students and teachers it is sufficient to say here that in every case the name of the author is sufficient guarantee for the accuracy of the information and the soundness of the educational lines upon which it proceeds. But there are two of these publications which demand a more extended notice—the Practical Teacher and the Practical Teacher's Art Monthly. The former, a monthly magazine now in its twentieth year of publication, was bought some five years ago from Mr. Joseph Hughes. Under the new management various improvements made their appearance in its columns, and the circulation increased rapidly. It is no exaggeration to say—and the writer speaks as a practical teacher of twenty-five years' standing—that to-day the Practical Teacher is second to no educational journal in the language. It affords valuable assistance to young teachers preparing for the various professional examinations, and does much to lighten the burden of school routine by supplying materials indispensable to teachers in the practical work of the class-room. But it does more: by means of articles contributed by the foremost educationists of the day it brings its readers into touch with contemporary life and thought in the educational world. A separate edition is printed for Scotland giving greater prominence to educational matters in the north, and containing tutorial work to meet the requirements of students going in for any of the examinations of the Scotch Education Department. Some four years ago an art section was instituted in the Practical Teacher, and the outcome has been the separate issue of the Practical Teacher's Art Monthly. This magazine is devoted solely to the consideration of all forms of drawing and handwork which find a place in the curriculum of elementary and secondary schools. Edited by Mr. J. Vaughan, Art Master to the London School Board, it may fairly claim that it has not only been exceedingly useful to teachers working under the Government programme, but also that it has been instrumental in modifying that programme to its present thoroughly educational form. The contributors are themselves experienced teachers, thoroughly conversant with the subjects of which they severally treat. As might be expected, therefore, the articles are eminently practical, and cannot fail to be most helpful, not only to those teachers who have the benefit of systematic instruction in schools of art and technical schools, but also, and indeed still more so, to the great mass of their rural brethren who in this matter are less fortunately situated. From principals of training colleges, from headmasters of schools, from H.M. Inspectors, and from teachers of drawing, Messrs. Nelson's new venture has received the most unqualified approval. Nor must the necessary—alas! that the other epithet is so frequently inapplicable—pupil-teacher be omitted from the list of those who have occasion to rise up and call this journal blessed. His wants are ministered to in a specially well written section

'Beautifully printed and artistically illustrated,' says one of H.M. Inspectors in an unsolicited testimonial, 'I venture to think your new journal cannot but have marked influence on the teaching of drawing and allied subjects, and particularly on developments that seem likely in the near future.'

Messrs. Nelson do not confine themselves to the publication of school books and teaching apparatus. They have a world-wide fame as the publishers of juvenile prize literature. The books issued in this department are selected with the utmost care, and the strictest attention is paid to their tone and teaching. Books for home reading—of travel, natural history, and fiction—are also issued from their press. Their list of story books for young people contains works by such old favourites as Kingston and Ballantyne, and such new friends as Herbert Hayens, Harold Avery, and Miss E. Everett-Green.

Messrs. Nelson have recently begun the publication of the works of Dickens, Thackeray, and Scott in a pretty and handy pocket form. For compactness, legibility, and cheapness this series is unique. The volumes are printed on a fine India paper so thin that 1,600 pages make up only an inch in thickness, and yet 'of sufficient toughness to allow even hard usage.' The economy of space is not obtained at the expense of the type, nor does the thinness of the paper interfere with the clearness of the text. The text is a clear long primer such as that used in printing the ordinary novel; and the paper is sufficiently opaque to prevent the printing on one side showing through on the other. Notices in our own columns and in those of other literary journals have been in the highest degree eulogistic. All Thackeray's works are included in the series, and twelve of Dickens's. A beginning has just been made with Scott, and the issue of the Waverley Novels will be completed by the end of 1901.

Up to 1896 Messrs. Nelson were agents in America for the Oxford Bibles. But in that year this arrangement was cancelled by mutual consent, and the firm took up the work of Bible publishing in the United States on their own account. They claim to be the first firm to manufacture high-class Bibles satisfactorily on American soil. They are at present issuing the new American Revised Bible—a revision of the Revised Version of 1881, carried out by American scholars and divines. Very naturally this branch of the business has been extended to this country, and Messrs. Nelson's Bibles are rapidly becoming as well known on this side of the Atlantic as on the other.

As illustrating the care which has been bestowed on the Teacher's Bible it may be mentioned that the contributors number nearly forty, and are recognised as among the most distinguished Bible students of Great Britain and America. Full, accurate, and up-to-date in point of information, admirably methodical in arrangement, profuse and excellent in the matter of illustration, and of sustained interest in manner of writing, the Teacher's Bible should be found on the bookshelves of every clergyman and Sunday School teacher, and indeed of everyone who would intelligently read the sacred volume.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'A Short History of English Commerce and Industry,' by L. L. Price. The object of this work is to give 'a brief account of the commercial and industrial development of England from the earliest times to the reign of Queen Victoria.' Naturally within the limited space at the author's command it has only been found possible to refer to the more important events and characteristics of each period, but the work under these restrictions has been performed with conspicuous ability and success, and Mr. Price, by excellent arrangement and conciseness of description, has been able to compress more matter into his volume than one would have thought possible. In the various chapters he respectively considers the position of commerce before the Norman Conquest, at the period of the Norman Conquest and after, from the mediæval to the modern world, and the mercantile system from the Tudors to the Georges, and so on to our own time. In the concluding chapter he discusses in a very interesting fashion the rise and progress of economic science. The volume is an able and admirably concise survey of a highly important subject, and may confidently be commended to all students of economic history.

From Mr. Thomas Burleigh.—'Words from St. Paul's,' by William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London. These are earnest, outspoken sermons, evidently delivered with a thorough conviction of the religious truths they embody. In their present form they should have the advantage of reaching a wider audience than could possibly be the case when preached from the pulpit of St. Paul's, and they are calculated to have great influence.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'The Fourth Generation,' by Walter Besant. The foundation for this novel is a murder. It was committed in days long ago, when George the Fourth was king. The great-grandfather of the hero, Squire Campaigne, was not only a brother-in-law of the murdered man, but he was seen in his company within a few minutes of his death. No suspicion, however, was attached to him on this account, and at the inquest a verdict of wilful murder against a labourer named Dunning was returned. This man had been seen to enter the wood where the body was found, and it was indeed he who announced the sad discovery. Thanks to a clever barrister at the trial it was made manifest that Dunning could not have committed the murder, and he was acquitted. Throughout his imprisonment no man was more convinced of his innocence than the Squire, and he not only at his own expense provided him with counsel, but in other ways assisted his defence. Dunning then was acquitted and went back to his work, but his old companions would no longer associate with him—the taint of murder was upon him—and eventually the Squire gave him money to emigrate, so he and all his family went to Botany Bay. Then Mr. Campaigne offered a reward of £500 for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer, but nothing came of it. Soon a great change came over the Squire. From being a jovial, companionable man, fond of his friends and his glass, he suddenly developed into a complete recluse, inhabiting the one room, never opening his mouth in the way of speech, taking exercise in a weary tramp up and down, up and down, on the terrace outside. For seventy years, when the story opens, he had led this miserable solitary life, while strangely enough in the meantime a series of misfortunes had happened to his descendants. Of his own family, the eldest boy went to Oxford and was afterwards elected a member of Parliament, but committed suicide; the second boy went into the Navy and was drowned; the girl married a merchant who turned out bad. Nor did the third generation fare any more prosperously. The object of Sir Walter Besant's story will now be seen, and who actually committed the murder may readily be imagined. Indeed, one of the failings of the story is that this is so transparent, and how all the characters could have remained so long in ignorance is quite marvellous. Several of these said characters are pictured with genuine force and humour, and it is in these we think that the main interest of the story will consist. Notable among them are two rascally brothers, the one earning his living by writing speeches for after-dinner orators, the other a loud-voiced, red-faced waster from Australia, who are quite in the author's best style. But the whole book is good, and among the few first-class novels that have passed through our hands this autumn, 'The Fourth Generation' should certainly hold a place.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley.—'Life in Scotland a Hundred Years Ago, as Reflected in the Old Statistical Accounts of Scotland, 1791–1799,' by James Murray, M.A. This work is to a large extent a digest of an undertaking started by Sir John Sinclair in 1790. His idea was to obtain from the minister of every parish in Scotland a statistical account of his own parish. The work was eventually completed in twenty-one volumes, the result of contributions from more than nine hundred individuals. They show the agricultural conditions of the country a century ago, its domestic and social characteristics, the laws or observances that existed regarding marriages, births, and funerals, the nature of the popular superstitions, ecclesiastical and theological doctrines, &c. Mr. Murray has compressed the large amount of material with which he has had to deal into small space with a large measure of dexterity, and his work is not only interesting but will be found of some practical value by the student of history.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Inner Shrine,' by Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick (Mrs. Andrew Dean). Mrs. Sidgwick has introduced a delightful heroine into this work, a fresh unaffected young girl who should captivate the hearts of all readers. She accompanies some vulgar but apparently good-hearted friends of her brother on the Continent, but ultimately they desert her at Schöndorf and she is left in a position of great peril, the difficulties of which are greatly intensified by a calamity that befalls her brother and his family. Throughout the situation, an Englishman, Major Ascham, stands her firm friend, but the niceties of the position may be estimated when it is said that he is an unmarried man travelling alone on the Continent, and that he is already engaged to a cousin. However, matters eventually are set right, and the story comes to a conclusion in smooth waters. Apart from the heroine, several well-defined characters appear in its pages, notably Mr. and Mrs. George Clatworthy, the vulgar personages previously referred to. They play a prominent if not creditable part in the narrative, and their respective peculiarities are described with excellent realism. 'The Inner Shrine' is a novel that certainly deserves to meet with success.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Carpathia Knox,' by Curtis Yorke. The pleasant characteristics of the author's style are apparent as ever in this novel. It is not exactly what one would term a powerful work, but it has a graceful, easy-flowing method of narration that is certain to render it a favourite with readers. If the characters are not particularly striking or original they at least appeal to us with a tender humanity that is very attractive, and the account of their doings possesses a sympathetic charm that many far more ambitious works totally lack. The love passages are particularly good. If 'Carpathia Knox' can hardly be called the best of Curtis Yorke's stories, it at least comes very near to it.

From Mr. John Long.—'Jean Keir of Craigneil,' by Sarah Tytler. In some respects no one that we know of can tell a homely Scotch story better than Miss Tytler. The nationality of her subject seems to impregnate every line of the narrative, all her views and expressions come from across the border, and she can no more help falling into the use of such words as 'neuk,' 'body,' and the like than she could succeed at a fiction of sensational adventure, which we very much doubt. Of the heroine of her work she has evidently made a faithful study, but we are inclined to think she has encumbered her with too much description, and that it would have been better to have allowed incident to reveal the idiosyncrasies of character. The portraiture lacks life and vivacity, and the same may be said of the other personages of the story. Miss Tytler, however, comes of an old-fashioned school of novelists who believe in putting good honest work into their productions rather than dexterous displays of suggestiveness, and we are glad to believe that there are numerous readers who will appreciate this form of treatment.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'The Problem of Asia and its Effect upon International Policies,' by A. T. Mahan, D.C.L., LL.D. The articles composing this volume originally appeared in Harper's New Monthly Magazine and the North American Review, where they attracted such notice as to warrant their reproduction in book form. The title of the book, however, in one respect is scarcely explicit, since in addition to the two valuable papers on Asia there is also an interesting contribution on the 'Merits of the Transvaal Dispute,' in which the justice of the British cause is vigorously upheld. Captain Mahan seems to have probed the essentials of the question very thoroughly, and his essay presents an array of carefully arranged facts argumentatively leading up to a well-established conclusion. One of the chief attractions of his style—here as in all his works strongly marked—is that there is no superfluity of words or ornateness of diction; he applies himself quietly and methodically to the subject in hand, and by pure persistence of reasoning, so to speak, not only proves his point but succeeds in making a decided impression on the reader. The chapters on Asia are written on this principle, and hence their undoubted attraction. The volume is worthy of its author, and greater praise than this we can scarcely bestow.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'The Story Book of the Shah; or, Legends of Old Persia,' by Ella C. Sykes. The tales of ancient Persia grouped in this volume are certainly very old-fashioned and amusing, and Miss Sykes has done good service in rescuing, if only their bare outlines, from the archives of the past. Their foundation, we understand, is to be found in an epic poem composed some eight centuries ago by Firdausi, the Oriental Homer, and entitled 'The Shah Nameh.' Perhaps some of our readers may recollect the work, which has obtained such celebrity in Persian circles as to be called the 'Iliad of the East.' In the work of resurrection and refurbishment, so to speak, the authoress of the volume has been assisted to good effect by Claude Cooper and Ethel R. Sykes, who have supplied illustrations and decorations with an appreciative regard for Persian taste. The volume also possesses an attractive binding, and in other respects is well produced.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Life of Abdur Rahman, Amir of Afghanistan, G.C.B., G.C.S.I.,' edited by Sultan Mahomed Khan. These two volumes present an interesting and in many respects fascinating history. The first eleven chapters of the work containing the narrative of the Amir's early life are written by himself, and have been translated from the original Persian by Sultan Mahomed Khan, the MSS. being brought to this country from Kabul by Miss Lillias Hamilton, M.D., while the remaining chapters supply an account of his government of his country, daily life and occupations, &c., taken down in his own words by Sultan Mahomed Khan when acting as his State-Secretary (or Mir Munshi). The narrative is a very remarkable one, and throws much light on the events occurring in Afghanistan during the latter half of the nineteenth century, besides illustrating the character of the people, their natural attributes, progress in civilisation, &c. There is also a simplicity of style in describing these events, which is very noticeable. One feature, that is bound, we should think, to make an impression on the reader, is the profusion of gifts that took place when two great men met each other. Thus, when Abdur Rahman visited the King of Bokhara, we are told that the latter 'sent Khilats for me and my officers, with 10,000 tangas for me, and 1,000 each for my officials, 500 or 600 for those of lesser degree, and 200 for each of my sowars. He also sent two sets of gold-plated harness for me. In return I sent him one gold-handled sword, one set of gold-mounted harness weighing 12,000 sovereigns, one gold-covered dagger, 200 gold coins, one jewelled hilt, price £400, and two Arab horses of my own breeding, also gold-mounted English saddles, nine pieces of gold cloth, nine pieces of Kashmir cloth, nine Kashmir shawls, nine Kashmir shawl turbans, nine pieces of white muslin, and nine gold caps.' This tabulation of gifts is delightful, and shows in what the influence of Eastern potentates chiefly consists. The two volumes are supplied with several interesting portraits and other illustrations, while a map of Afghanistan reproduced by permission of Colonel St. John Gore, R.E., Chief of the Indian Survey, admirably serves as a topographical guide to the scene of the Amir's early adventures.

From the same.—'The Life of Paris,' by Richard Whiteing. Whatever Mr. Whiteing writes is marked by vitality and distinction. His style is at once virile and fluid, that is to say, rapid, nervous, and graceful. It is also exact. In this vivid account of Parisian life his high qualities are seen at their best, as all who read the sketches of which it consists as they appeared in the Century. In the magazine they had the advantage of beautiful illustrations, and we cannot help regretting that at least some of those illustrations have not been reproduced in this book. But we must take the gifts of the gods as they are sent, and the volume even without pictures will be a delight alike to all who know Paris and all who relish first-rate writing. It is divided into six chapters, dealing with government, amusements, art, the Paris of the Faubourgs, fashionable Paris, and life on the Boulevard. Mr. Whiteing knows his Paris almost as well as Dickens knew his London. As a consequence this book is the best on the French capital which has appeared for years. To literary people one of the most interesting parts is that in which the methods of the French Academy are described: 'When M. Dufaure departs this life, early in the eighties, M. Cherbuliez takes his place. M. Cherbuliez pronounces the discourse on M. Dufaure. M. Renan, director of the Academy, replies to M. Cherbuliez. M. Renan, after his wont, is unctuously appreciative, candid, tolerant—in short, everything that human beings might be if they were able to send in specifications for their own make-up before birth.' Mr. Whiteing has evidently no great faith in French sincerity on such occasions; but if the phrases are mostly empty they are at least charmingly neat. And 'The Life of Paris' is charming. To Mr. Whiteing's admirers it will be enough that it is his; to those who are still strangers to his work we have only to say procure this book without delay if you desire a mental treat.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'A Lifetime in South Africa': being the Recollections of the First Premier of Natal,' by the Hon. Sir John Robinson, K.C.M.G. This is an extremely interesting book, owing much of its attraction to the agreeable method of its narration. The author first takes us back to the days of his boyhood, and in an 'introductory retrospect' describes his early struggles and experiences. He started life as a journalist, an honourable career which he followed until he took office in 1893. His father, it should be mentioned, was a member of this profession, being proprietor and editor of the Natal Mercury, 'a little weekly sheet containing twenty short columns of matter, the preparation of which at the time seemed to absorb as much time and thought as does to-day the daily broadsheet of many pages.' On this modest production the son was for many years reporter, proof corrector, accountant, and collector, and as the fifties advanced to their close much of the editorial work was superadded. Eventually he became part proprietor and sole controller of the destinies of the paper. Having thus told us of some of the experiences that led up to the formation of his character, Sir John next embarks on what may be termed the book proper. Some idea of the nature of this may be gathered from the titles of the different chapters, which respectively treat of the Outgoers, the Governors, the Voortrekkers, the Settlers as Pioneers, Lawmakers, Traders, Civilisers, and Neighbours, the Natives, the War—its Genesis and its Revelations, and the Outlook. In his account of the settlers and their characteristics and spheres of influence, Sir John Robinson is particularly interesting, and his work throughout bears the impress of thought and close observation. In his concluding chapter he advocates a future policy when dealing with the South African Republics of justice and forbearance, and he utters an expression of opinion in regard to the cause of the war with which we are sure all our readers will agree. 'Whatever,' he writes, 'may be said to the contrary by Boer leaders or Boer sympathisers, it is out of their power to fasten upon either the Empire or the Colonies the blame of blood-guiltiness. That might have been possible had war followed upon the heels of the Raid, and it cannot be doubted that the fact weighed mightily with all Imperial and Colonial statesmen who were responsible for the conduct of affairs through that critical period. No such possibility exists now. The Home Government and its representatives carried forbearance throughout subsequent negotiations to the point of peril, and in the end were found disastrously unprepared for the contingency of war. The two Colonial Governments have all through shown the greatest anxiety that peace should remain unbroken. The hope and effort of all have been centred in a bloodless settlement of outstanding grievances, in an amicable adjustment of the claims of the Uitlander, in the peaceful recognition of British supremacy.' All those who would like to hear an experienced opinion of South African affairs from the colonial point of view should get this volume, and we can promise them both interest and enlightenment.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'A Literary History of America,' by Barrett Wendell, Professor of English at Harvard College. It is curious and significant to reflect how seldom Professors of English are masters of English style. On this side of the Atlantic we have Professors of English Rhetoric who set the example of writing in the sloppiest of sloppy styles, as if in practice they wished to disprove what they taught or tried to teach in theory. On the other side there are professors who do understand the beauties and the niceties of style—men like Dr. Dowden of Dublin, and Professor Raleigh of Glasgow, the author of an admirable manual on 'Style.' Professor Wendell, of Harvard, is not among the stylists. He is capable of writing in Yankee English 'may help define our meaning'; also, 'none are,' as if one should say 'no one are.' But he has evidently given a good deal of study to his subject, and his book is businesslike if it lacks charm. He opens with a sketch of English history, 1600-1700, and ends with 'the present time.' The beginnings of American literature are described out of obvious fulness of knowledge, and its development traced—in the manner in which professors commonly lecture to their classes. The most interesting section of the work is that devoted to what the author calls 'The Renaissance of New England,' a section which includes chapters on the great New England group which made Boston what it is in literature. On Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, and Holmes Professor Wendell is excellent; on Hawthorne he is less satisfactory. We do not think he does justice to the marvellous insight of Hawthorne, or to the sheer intellectual and imaginative power which gave us 'The Scarlet Letter.' The final section dealing with later developments of American literature is done with knowledge and sympathy, and briefly as is right. The book is not a manual of æsthetics. Quite clearly there are more things in first-class literature and often in second-class than are dreamt of in Professor Wendell's philosophy, but he has turned out a workmanlike volume which will give any student a fair idea of the work of American authors. The work seems to have been written as a sort of literary class book, and is likely to be useful to those preparing for examinations. It is furnished with an index and a remarkably full list of authorities.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Justice of Revenge,' by George Griffith. The writers of sensational fiction, we think, often make a mistake in not imparting sufficient variety to their stories. The aspect of villainy, we take it, is very much enhanced by contrast with innocence and healthy romance. In Mr. Griffith's novel there is not a single character with whom the reader can have any sympathy. Stephen Lorne, who has an invention, resulting from ten years' hard labour, stolen from him by a large engineering firm, is at first certainly entitled to some compassion, but the course he takes to set himself right with his oppressors utterly fails to win our approval. Before his death he perfects a mysterious contrivance by which his daughter is enabled to murder without fear of detection all his enemies, and from childhood she is brought up with a knowledge of the task to which she has to devote herself. After the father's death she joins a secret society of anarchists, among whom she is known as the Death Angel. In this character she thoroughly carries out her mission, and eventually comes by her death in the method she has compassed for other people. The interest of the reader is chiefly carried forward by the desire to know what was the actual secret of Viola Lorne's death-dealing power, and this, as may be supposed, is never revealed. The story depends entirely upon its sensational attributes, which are very strongly marked.

New Editions.—Messrs. George Bell & Sons have issued a fifteenth impression in paper covers of the 'Verses and Translations of C.S.C.' We are afraid Mr. Calverley's witty effusions were better appreciated by a past generation of readers than now, but those who would revel in the humorous outbursts of an original mind should purchase this little work, and they will undoubtedly not regret the modest outlay.—Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have added 'Dariel: a Romance of Surrey' to their popular half-crown edition of Mr. R. D. Blackmore's novels. The volume presents the neat binding and excellent qualities of paper and printing which are now so familiar in connection with this edition, and it has, moreover, some good illustrations by Chris Hammond.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS

SECOND EDITION is now ready of CAPTAIN MAHAN'S STORY OF THE WAR IN AFRICA.

By Captain A. T. Mahan, U.S.N., Author of 'The Life of Nelson,' 'The Influence of Sea-Power on History,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth extra, with Map, 10*s.* 6*d.* net. [Ready.

'Perhaps nowhere does there exist in brief compass so well-written a narrative of the campaign.'—Army and Navy Gazette.

'Well worth the perusal of every military student, and is, in my opinion, far and away the best military book on the war which has been published.'—Leeds Mercury.

'Even when after the war we shall be deluged with bulky histories and careful analyses of the fighting, Captain Mahan's survey will still be needed.'—Daily Express.

'As a criticism upon the general lines of campaign it is perhaps the most suggestive and illuminating work which has yet appeared, and merits the most careful study.'—Daily Telegraph.

'This strikes us as the most luminous account of the war we have yet seen.'—Yorkshire Daily Post.

'An eminently shrewd observer.'—Globe.

'You are placed from the outset in possession of an intelligible view of the business. . . The whole thing is clear in comparatively little space.'—Daily News.

'Gives to the whole story a lucidity and attraction.'—Morning Post.

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S

THE PROBLEM OF ASIA AND ITS EFFECT UPON INTERNATIONAL POLICIES.

By Captain A. T. Mahan, D.C.L., LL.D. With Map, 259 pp., post 8vo. 10*s.* 6*d.* net. [Ready.

Demy 8vo. 400 pp., fully Illustrated, 14*s.* net.

THE INHABITANTS OF THE PHILIPPINES.

By Frederic H. Sawyer, Memb. Inst. C.E.; Memb. Inst. N.A. [Ready.

'Mr. Sawyer's book may be commended to all interested in the Eastern Archipelago, whether from the political or the natural point of view. It makes no pretension to style, but it is full of the most curious information regarding the history, the resources, and the life and customs of the numerous races who inhabit the islands. A good map and an immense number of excellent photographs add greatly to the value of the work.'—Glasgow Herald.

SECOND EDITION. READY.

SAILING ALONE AROUND THE WORLD.

By Captain Joshua Slocum. Being a Personal Narrative of the Experiences of the Sloop Spray on her single-handed Voyage of 46,000 miles. With 63 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 8*s.* 6*d.* net.

'Should find millions of readers. A wonderful record of human pluck, endurance, and perseverance.'—Chambers's Journal.

Demy 8vo. Illustrated, 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

LEPCHA LAND;

Or, Six Weeks in the Sikhim Himalayas. By Florence Donaldson. With Photogravure Frontispiece, Map of Route, and 108 Illustrations. [Ready.

'Much of the charm of those chapters dealing with the people who inhabit the northern reaches of India is due to a sharpness and freshness of observation which is often noticeable in books by lady travellers. Mrs. Donaldson has an exceptionally alert eye, and obviously an ardent and untiring enthusiasm for recording facts and impressions. It would have been impossible otherwise to fill a book of over 200 pages with a narrative whose interest never flags.'—Liverpool Mercury.

ADDITION TO LOW'S LIBRARY OF TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

AT THE ANTIPODES:

Travels in Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, The New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America. By G. Verschuur. With Map and numerous Illustrations. New Edit. crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Being Notes on Various Subjects connected with China. By J. Dyer Ball, M.R.A.S., H.M. Civil Service, Hong Kong. 3rd Edition, Revised and Enlarged, 8vo. 12*s.* 6*d.* net. [Ready

FICTION.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 6*s.*

THE BLESSING OF ESAU:

A Romance of the Marshlands. By Frank Savile, Author of 'John Ship,' 'Beyond the Great South Wall,' &c. [Ready.

'Mr. Savile has denied himself nothing in the way of material, incident, and passion. He has chosen a splendid background, and right admirably has he painted us this richly-coloured picture of a period rich in romance, and in martial glory second to none.'—Vanity Fair.

'Is breathlessly interesting, and at the same time a work of high literary merit.' Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

ADDITIONS TO LOW'S HALF-CROWN NOVELS.

BLACKMORE (R. D.)

DARIEL. Small crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.* [Ready.

'Abounds in those touches of nature which the author of "Lorna Doone" taught the world to expect when he took up his magic pen.'—Leeds Mercury.

MAID OF SKER. [Nearly ready.

NEW WORK BY JULES VERNE.

Crown 8vo. very fully illustrated, cloth extra, 6*s.*

THE WILL OF AN ECCENTRIC.

By Jules Verne.

'An extraordinary story . . . arouses the liveliest interest.'—Leeds Mercury.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of he most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some Hundreds of Out-of-Print Books are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Publishers' Circular can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ..	8s. 6d.
„ Six Months ditto ditto	4s. 6d.
„ Three Months ditto ditto	2s. 6d.
To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage	11s. 0d.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

IN

JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'They cover a wide range—in marked contrast to the tame and ordinary drawing book. . . . Draughtsmen will welcome these bright and attractive copies.'—Journal of Education.

'An excellent series worthy of high commendation.'—Educational Times.

'A series of exceptional merit. . . . We know of no similar attempt to popularise high art.' Schoolmaster.

'An excellent and highly practical series . . . very comprehensive.' School Board Chronicle.

'Tastefully designed, chastely executed, in every respect excellent—eminently fitted to develop the artistic faculties.'—Educational News.

'Serve admirably as a relief from Code grinding. . . . Splendid course of drawing.' Teachers' Aid.

'Have seen nothing like them, can most confidently recommend them.' Civil Service Gazette.

'Must be productive of the best possible results.'—National Teacher.

'The series for artistic excellence or for cheapness has no superior.'—Children's Mistress.

'Should be seen by every Headmaster who makes drawing a subject in his school.' Literary World.

METHOD GASPEY-OTTO-SAUER
FOR THE STUDY OF MODERN LANGUAGES,
Published by JULIUS GROOS, HEIDELBERG.
JUST OUT—
JAMES CONNOR
Conversation book in French, German and English, for the use of schools and travellers.)
12th Edition improved. 12mo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

'The experiment in the first part to teach grammar by examples has excellently been performed. A splendid help for repeating and practising grammatical difficulties is found in this part of the book. The author has extremely well succeeded in selecting the matter as well as the examples. The conversations, the model phrases, in short everything in the book, is well selected and suitably applied. The translations in the three languages are idiomatical and correct throughout. It will be impossible to use the book without profiting by it.'

Few recent works are more suggestive than 'Pages from a Journal,' by Mark Rutherford, which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has just published. The author seems to have the power of probing the inner consciousness, so to speak, of both human beings and Nature; and, whether speaking of that greatest of all cowards, as Marcus Aurelius puts it, the man who pities himself, or the aspect of an autumn day, he is equally penetrative and felicitous. Possibly it is only the more earnest and refined of readers who will be attracted by his book—those who like to follow the mazy windings of an idea when it has once been set moving; but for these there is ample gratification in this volume. The following quotation, for instance, opens up a vast train of thought: 'In these latter days of anarchy and tumult, when there is no gospel of faith or morals, when democracy seems bent on falsifying every prediction of earlier democratic enthusiasts by developing worse dangers to liberty than any which our forefathers had to encounter, and when the misery of cities is so great, it appears absurd, not to say wrong, that we should sit still and read books. I am ashamed when I go into my own little room and open Milton or Shakespeare after looking at a newspaper or walking through the streets of London. I feel that Milton and Shakespeare are luxuries, and that I really belong to the class which builds palaces for its pleasure, although men and women may be starving on the roads.' The reply that naturally rises to the lips is that some books are necessary to a man's higher existence as stimulating him to greater endeavour in actual life; but there are numerous bypaths for reflection.

In some respects the volume has a distinct literary flavour. This is strongest at the outset in the account of a visit paid to Carlyle in 1850. The writer, then being very young, was horrified at the storm of execration which arose on the publication of the 'Latter-day Pamphlets,' and in the height of his enthusiasm he wrote to the Sage of Chelsea assuring him that there was at least one person who believed in him. Carlyle replied in a kindly letter, full of excellent advice and practical wisdom. His correspondent was exhorted to take everything on its own merits, independent of the belief or unbelief cherished in it by other people, and in particular to practise the teachings with which he was impressed. A mere belief that led to no definite results of action was but a worthless thing to possess. Carlyle referred to the magnitude of his work on Frederick the Great. 'I ought to have been younger to have undertaken such a task. If they were to offer me all Prussia, all the solar system, I would not write Frederick again. No bribe from God or man would tempt me to do it.' Mark Rutherford then makes some remarks on Carlyle as a personality. 'It has been said that Carlyle is great because he is graphic, and he is supposed to be summed up in "mere picturesqueness," the silliest of verdicts. A man may be graphic in two ways. He may deal with his subject from the outside, and by dint of using strong language may "graphically" describe an execution or a drunken row in the streets. But he may be graphic by ability to penetrate into essence and to express it in words which are worthy of it. What higher virtue than this can we imagine in poet, artist, or prophet?' The author is also clearly right when he says that much of Carlyle's fierceness is 'an inverted tenderness.'

In other respects the volume is full of literary interest. There are 'thoughts'—we can hardly in all cases, by reason of their brevity, call them essays—on Spinoza, Sir Walter Scott's use of the supernatural, some notes on Milton, the morality of Byron's poetry ('The Corsair' in particular being cited), and Byron, Goethe, and Matthew Arnold. Scott's supernatural effects seem weak when indicated by quotations deprived of their context. It is said of Milton that much of the apologetic indifference with which he is treated is due to his Nonconformity and the fact that his theme is 'a theology which for most people is no longer vital.' For Byron great admiration is expressed, and some points of resemblance are drawn between him and Charlotte Brontë. 'The Byron "vogue," we are told, will never pass so long as men and women are men and women. Mr. Arnold and the critics may remind us of his imperfections of form, but Goethe is right after all, for not since Shakespeare have we had anyone der ihm zu vergleichen wäre.' There are also one or two stories pregnant with human feeling in the pages of 'Mark Rutherford's Journal,' and in other directions the volume forms subject for thought. It is certainly worthy of attention.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Heinemann has in preparation a translation of a book by a young French lieutenant who served under General Villebois with the Boers, and who returned to Europe this autumn. It is, we understand, written with great fairness and appreciation of his opponents, and great resentment at the ill-treatment the foreigners received at the hands of the Boers. He is loud in the praise of the chivalry of the English officers, although he considers their knowledge of soldiering but limited. In January Mr. Heinemann will publish the 'Letters of Prince Bismarck to his Wife' both before and after marriage.

The Clarendon Press will publish in the beginning of January a French Grammar for upper forms in public schools, by Arthur H. Wall, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, Assistant Master at Marlborough College. It includes phonology, accidence, and syntax, with historical notes, besides indicating variations in spelling and syntax permitted by the decree of the French Minister of Public Instruction issued on July 31, 1900.

'Spanish Highways and Byways,' by Katharine Lee Bates, is the record of tourists' impressions of travel in the Peninsula—impressions that modify a good deal the conventional view. Laborious Spaniards, struggling with bitter poverty, meet them at the very frontier: yet in the midst of disaster Spain was keeping carnival. As Americans, the travellers knew how to appreciate their enemies, and Miss Bates tells a magnificent story of self-conscription and self-sacrifice; and in a moving chapter she describes the tribute which Spain paid to one of her poets—whom the Spaniards did not read. There are plenty of illustrations, but the narrative is picturesque enough to dispense with them if need were. The general effect of the book is sad enough, showing a people conscious of its own misery, but conscious in despair; yet the fascination of the country and its ornaments redeems these effects, and makes Miss Bates singularly well worth reading. Messrs. Macmillan are the publishers.

It is generally known that the publisher of 'Cheer, Boys, Cheer' bought the song of the composer and the librettist for a few shillings, and that he made many thousands of pounds by the transaction. But it is now stated, on good authority, that when the song became the rage of London and of every town in England the publisher had the grace to send the composer a silver inkstand with a cheque for £500 secreted in the wafer box.

We understand that Mrs. Cornwallis-West's (Lady Randolph Churchill's) Anglo-Saxon Review (No. 7) will be published immediately by her from the new offices of the review at 49 Rupert Street, W.

Mr. L. L. Forman, of Cornell University, has edited a volume of selections from 'Plato,' with Introduction and Notes, which is included in Messrs. Macmillan's 'Classical' series. The book is professedly written for beginners, students still struggling with the difficulties of grammar, and aims merely at furnishing an introduction first to Plato's language, with the constant aid of grammar and dictionary, and, secondly, to the figure of the Platonic Socrates.

The attention which Mr. Stephen Phillips's 'Herod' has attracted on the Continent and in the United States speaks well for the far-reaching influence of the poetic drama. Arrangements have just been concluded for the translation of it into German, and applications have also been received for the French, Russian, Italian, and Swedish rights of translation.

The University Tutorial Press will shortly issue 'Deductions in Euclid,' by T. W. Edmondson, M.A. This work will contain about 300 of the most important riders on Euclid I.–IV., worked out fully, and will be illustrated.

We understand that Sir Clements Markham and Mr. Raymond Beazley have now started work on the first volume of the reprint of the Hakluyt Voyages, which is to appear next year. The Hakluyt Society will also publish in 1901 'Mendana's Voyage to the Solomon Islands in 1568.' The work will be in two volumes, well illustrated.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons are publishing a volume dealing with the events of the South African war from a military point of view. It is entitled 'Tactics of To-day,' the author being Major Callwell, who has previously written a work treating of maritime warfare in relation to warfare by land.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, a collected edition of whose works in fourteen volumes Messrs. Putnam's Sons are publishing, has barely turned forty, but in his time has been statesman, soldier, and author. This, one may remark, is being the many-sided character with a vengeance. His writings also are of infinite variety, for they concern soldiering, hunting, naval history, and civil administration. He is a contributor to the history of the British Navy which Mr. Laird Clowes edits.

A new periodical entitled The Thrush is to be published at the beginning of the new century, which is a novel and interesting departure from ordinary ventures in modern journalism. It is to be composed entirely of hitherto unpublished poetry. The opening sonnet is from the pen of Dr. Richard Garnett, C.B., editor of the 'Standard Library of Famous Literature.' It will endeavour to reach the masses and to foster and encourage the cult of poetry amongst the people. The Thrush is to be published every month at fourpence.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have recently issued a large number of additional volumes in their dainty 'Temple Classics.' Among these are 'Our Village: Sketches of Rural Character and Scenery,' by Mary Russell Mitford; Volumes III., IV., V., and VI. of Giorgio Vasari's 'Lives of the Painters, Sculptors, and Architects'; Volume III. of 'The Romance of the Rose,' by W. Lorris and E. J. Copinel, 'Englished' by F. Sellis; and Volumes II. and III. of Macaulay's 'Critical and Historical Essays.' Each of these volumes is supplied with the needful notes and indices, and in the matter of general production comes fully up to the high standard set by the series.

The devotedness of some men to their business is touching. We learn that the picture of jovial Father Christmas which adorns the cover of Messrs. James M'Geachy & Co.'s Christmas List bears a marked resemblance—not to put too fine a point on it—to Mr. Alexander Stewart, who for so long has seconded Mr. Morgan in the management of that firm. If this novelty catch on we may look out for remarkable developments in the trade. Father Christmas is certainly not continually in evidence, but we have always Punch and Judy, the Penny Showman, and Waxworks to fall back upon. Where the partners of a firm are numerous, an entire comic tragedy might be pictured. Such developments would eventually lead, no doubt, to the collection of trade lists, their value would rise to fabulous amounts, and—but the mind loses itself in an immensity of ethereal speculation.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

At the meeting of the Council of the Publishers' Association on the 20th inst., Mr. Frederick Macmillan, the President, called attention to an advertisement which had been published in one of the Indian papers.

It appeared that a bookseller in India advertised the fact that books make very appropriate presents; and that English residents in India, who wanted to make presents to friends in the United Kingdom, should buy the cheap colonial editions offered by the advertiser, and post them to the old country.

He pointed out that the postage was very cheap now, that there was no duty to pay, and that the only editions on sale in England were much more expensive, so the cheap colonial editions would be greatly appreciated by the recipients.

It was decided that explanations should be requested from the enterprising Indian firm in question.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Lord Rosebery's speech at Glasgow on the British Empire and on the necessity for the study of modern languages in forming men capable of occupying high positions in all branches of human activity, has attracted considerable attention on the Continent. That in Germany the importance of the subject is not overlooked no one knows better than the Earl of Rosebery; and we now learn from the Allgemeine Zeitung that, in consequence of the great demand for German technologists in Russia, it has been resolved by the Bavarian Minister of Education to order the teaching of the Russian language at one of the principal public schools in Munich.

Count Leo Tolstoi has so far recovered from his recent accident that he is able to resume his literary work. He is busily occupied with a romance to be called 'A Corpse'; and has just finished a new philosophical treatise entitled 'Where is the Root of Evil?' The work is chiefly descriptive of the miserable condition of the inmates of the prisons, hospitals, and lunatic asylums in Russia, whose treatment is most barbarous. It is asserted that so absorbed is Tolstoi in his work that he has ceased to dig, cut wood or draw water as he was used so indefatigably to do hitherto.

M. Denormandie has decided to publish through MM. Hachette in a second edition his interesting recollections, 'Temps passé, jours présents (Notes de Famille).' The first edition, printed for private circulation only, has already been noticed in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. The same firm announces a new and important work on Madagascar by an attaché on the Governor-General's staff entitled 'Voyage in Général Gallieni,' in which are related the General's five months' tour of the island, during which he visited every town and village and all the establishments and factories on the coast.

At the last meeting of the Académie des Sciences M. Albert Sorel read an analysis of a volume of memoirs by M. de Marcère entitled 'Le Seize Mai et la fin du Septennat.' The writer, who witnessed and took part in the events related, claims for his work a truthful character, and apologises for its taking the tone of an autobiography. M. Sorel believes the public will gladly pardon the autobiographical nature of the work, to which it gives a living interest. Presumably these memoirs will ere long be published. 'Garat, 1762–1823,' par Paul Lafond, is an agreeable contribution to the history of the last days of the old French Monarchy and to that of the Republic and the Empire. Garat was an excellent musician endowed with a fine voice, and Marie-Antoinette sang duets with him. M. Lafond has written an interesting and amusing biography of the gifted little artist. It is published by Calmann Lévy, which firm also publishes 'La Mort des Dieux,' a romance of the days of Julian the Apostate, by the Russian author Dmitry Mérejkowsky.

All that we know at the end of the nineteenth century about Pompeii, its art and culture, has been collected, and is fully described in an accessible form by August Mau, the most competent authority on the subject at the present day, in 'Pompeii in Leben und Kunst,' illustrated by numerous views, mostly autotypes, and published by Wilhelm Engelmann, Leipzig.

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Mr. James Duff Brown, Borough Librarian, Finsbury, contributes to the current number of the Library World an interesting article on the subject of 'Out-of-Print Books.' Most librarians in the older libraries, he remarks, know the difficulty of obtaining copies of certain books which have been allowed to go out of print by their publishers. He finds that the number of such books is constantly increasing. To meet the difficulties of the case he suggests that 'any popular and good book which has been allowed to drop out of print should be republished.' Hundreds of excellent works are no longer obtainable in modern editions. There are other books, proceeds Mr. Brown, which have obtained a certain measure of recognition and wide popularity, which, for some unknown reason, have been allowed to disappear from the lists of their publishers. Apart from the desirability of having copies of such books in public libraries in order to keep catalogues and stock books complete and correct, the further and greater question remains of keeping such books in print because of their place in English literature. In the case of some of the older books which form landmarks in literary history, it will be absolutely necessary to have well-edited modern reprints, for the benefit of the students who are being formed in every school in the kingdom. In this case no question of copyright can intervene, and I have a strong feeling that the owners of copyrights which are no longer kept effective and alive by continuous publication should be deprived of the right of a monopoly which they decline to exercise. If a patent right becomes void by disuse, so also should the copyright in books. However, this is by the way, and scarcely affects the case, since it is more than likely the owner of a copyright would soon re-issue an edition if he thought it worth doing. This is really the practical point of the whole question. The first question that a publisher will ask himself is this—'Will it pay me to re-issue an edition of so-and-so, and, if issued, who will buy it?' The answer to this is easy. If any book was once popular enough to find its way into most of the public and other libraries of Britain and her Colonies, not to speak of the United States, it stands to reason that these institutions among them would be able to take up most of an edition of 1,000 copies at once, and with their replacements, as copies got worn out, gradually account for a considerable number more. If publishers of such re-issues would print the books in a good style on a superior quality of paper, and issue them generally in a worthy form, there would also be a considerable demand for them among booksellers and the general public, so that, altogether, the publisher would not be venturing so much on a wild-cat speculation, as upon an absolute certainty. Mr. Brown raises a question which, we think, deserves the attention of publishers as well as of librarians.

AMERICA AND THE MEMORIAL TO WILLIAM BLACK.

A memorial to William Black, the novelist, is to be set up in the form of a beacon, on Duart Point, in the Sound of Mull, near Oban. Everyone who knows Black's stories knows Oban, in the West Highlands of Scotland. A throng of tourists, including many Americans, go there every year, and will see the memorial. The beacon, a stone tower, has been designed by William Leiper, Esq., R.S.A. Its first cost will be about £5,000, and when it is finished the Northern Lighthouse Board will undertake its care and maintenance. The Board considers a beacon on Duart Point necessary. The lack of one cost two wrecks last winter. It was at first proposed to establish a life-saving station in memory of Black, but the equipment of that would have needed renewal, and a beacon seemed simpler and better. Of the money needed, an American Committee, consisting of Mr. Alden, of Harper's Magazine, and Messrs. R. R. Bowker, Andrew Carnegie, J. Henry Harper, and W. M. Laffan, of the Sun, has agreed to raise $1,500. The money has already been advanced, but it is desired that the fund shall be as representative as possible. Mr. Black's friends and readers in America are invited to send their subscriptions to Harper & Brothers, New York.—Harper's Weekly.

AUSTRALIAN WRITERS IN LONDON.

A correspondent of the Sydney Daily Telegraph has been telling the readers of that journal how Australian writers fare in this country. Most of them, he remarks, are not equipped with the experience that is necessary for a start in London, their stock-in-trade usually consisting of a few stories that have appeared in Australian weeklies, a huge grip-sack of stories that have never appeared, and a supply of coufidence destined to dwindle every week. Such Australians are encountered only too frequently in London, many looking for work of any sort, and many more making a scanty living by the uncongenial employment known as 'lining.'

On the other hand, he proceeds, there are a number of Australians who are doing very well in the literary and journalistic world, where success is the certain reward of merit combined with hard work.

It is pointed out that the appreciation shown to men like Mr. A. G. Hales and Mr. MacIlwaine gives an increased value to Australian pen-work in London. It is safe to say that no war correspondent has gained so much in reputation during the African campaign as Mr. Hales, save only Mr. Winston Churchill.

Mr. McIlwaine, we are told, has commanded success in another direction, his latest book, 'Fate the Fiddler,' more than confirming the good impression made by his previous productions, 'Twilight Reef' and 'Dinkinbar.'

The most recently-arrived member of the Australian band is Mr. Henry Lawson, who, although he has only been in London a short time, is already able to look forward with confidence to a good reception from the reading public. Lawson is at an advantage over most of the Australians who have laid siege to literary London, because his reputation has preceded him to a certain extent.

'No Australian story complete without a bushranger' has too long been the motto of the magazine editor, and England is heartily sick of the Australian bushranger of gentlemanly antecedents.

That, adds the writer, is why MacIlwaine's work was hailed with pleasure as striking a new note on the keyboard of Australian fiction, and that is why Lawson will print well and sell well in London.

An intimate knowledge of Australian matters is an endowment liable to land its possessor in difficulties, unless joined to literary ability of the highest order.

The article closes with a word of warning. The success of writers like Becke and MacIlwaine, and the fair prospect before Lawson, are more than balanced by the dozens whose failures have not received much attention. If any Australian writer has a story to tell to the people of England, it were wiser that he forwarded it to a literary agent of repute than that he should himself venture among editors and publishers. In literature, as in every other profession, there is in London a career for talent, a hardly-earned living for mediocrity, and no place whatever for inexperience and incompetence.

SALE JOTTINGS.

Last week Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge sold a miscellaneous collection of books, which included an unpublished work of William Blake, 'Angels and Devils,' illustrated with 42 original drawings by the author—£36 (Pearson); John Constable, 'Various Subjects of Landscape Characteristic of English Scenery,' 1830—£14 (Maggs); E. Hasted, 'History and Topographical Survey of the County of Kent,' 1778–98—£16. 10*s*. (Graystone); 'The Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society,' from the commencement in 1845 to February 1900—£16. 5*s*. (George); the 'Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society of London,' from the commencement in 1831 to January 1900—£22 (Sotheran); the 'Memoirs' of the same society, with the 'Monthly Notices,' from Vol. XIX. to Vol. XXVI.—£30 (Sotheran); the Ray Society publications from the commencement in 1844 to 1897, 74 volumes —£28 (Quaritch); S. Shaw, 'History and Antiquities of Staffordshire,' 1798-1801, large paper—£12 (Walford); the Burlington Fine Arts Club 'Catalogue of the Exhibition of Miniatures,' 1889—£31 (Lewine); Sir T. Lawrence, 'Engravings from his Choicest Works,' 53 beautiful plates — £24. 10*s*. (White); MM. Grimm, 'German Popular Stories,' 1825-26, with fine impressions of the etchings by G. Cruikshank—£13. 5*s*. (Hornstein).

This week Messrs. Sotheby have sold an exceptionally interesting collection of books and manuscripts, which included—J. Aubrey, 'Natural History and Antiquities of the County of Surrey,' 1718-19, with 186 extra illustrations, 4 v. (Ridler); Audubon and Bachman, 'Viviparous Quadrupeds of North America' [illegible] (Wesley); Bartolus de Saxoferrato, 'Lectura super tres libris codicis,' &c., 1477—£11. 15*s*. (F. Clarke); Baltasar de Beaujoyeulx, 'Balet comique de la Royne,' Paris, 1582—£37. 10*s*. (Macgeorge); a copy of the first edition of the Bible in Welsh, 1588—£19 (Leighton); R. W. Billings, 'Baronial and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Scotland,' 1845–1852—£12 12*s.* (Wood); Boccaccio, 'Fiametta,' 1472, imperfect—£10. 15*s.* (Leighton); Boydell's 'Shakespeare Gallery,' 1803—£15. 15*s.* (Ridler); Alain Chartier, 'Ensuyèt les faictz,' Paris, about 1514–£12. 15*s.* (Morgand); R. Clutterbuck, 'The History and Antiquities of the County of Hereford,' 1815–27—£18 (Sotheran); Dante, 'La Divina Commedia,' 1487, illustrated — £40 (Allatini); 'Galerie de Florence et du Palais Pitti,' 1789–1821—£10. 5*s.* (Rosenheim); 'The Knightly Tale of Golagrus and Gawane'—£10 (Ellis); and 'The Gospels of the fower Euangelistes, translated in the olde Saxons tyme out of Latin into the vulgar tounge,' &c., 1571—£14. 5*s.* (Cotton).

THE PUBLISHERS' TRAVELLER.

This is the time when the publisher's traveller is, or ought to be, busiest. If he is not busy the circumstance may be due to his own incapacity or want of interest, for in no department of the book trade does 'the personal equation' tell with so much force as in the traveller's. In continuation of the series of articles on 'the profession of bookselling,' which our American contemporary, the Publishers' Weekly, is printing, a short paper recently appeared on the traveller in relation to his customers. As it seems to us sensible and timely, we reproduce it for the benefit of younger travellers in this country. The counsel runs thus: 'Cheerfulness is most requisite in a travelling salesman—cheerfulness even to joviality—and to make his business friends equally cheerful, should be among the traveller's chief objects. It is often carelessly said that there should be no friendship in business, or, that there can be no friendship in business; yet it is a matter of fact, that the Anglo-Saxon is ruled as much by custom and sentiment as by law. Of course, if we adopt the narrow view that business is to make a sale without respect to the right or well-being of the buyer, then there can be no friendship in business; but if we take the broader view that good business is that only which contributes to the prosperity and advantage of all parties concerned, then it will be found that not only can business and friendship co-exist, but that it is difficult to maintain a mutually satisfactory business relationship unless the element of friendship forms part of the bond.

'Friendship is defined by Webster as "an attachment to a person proceeding from intimate acquaintance, and a reciprocation of kind offices, or from a favourable opinion of the amiable and respectable qualities of his mind." The buying and selling of goods from which the buyer and seller both profit is undeniably "a reciprocation of kind offices." And if an "intimate acquaintance" results, and a reciprocal "favourable opinion of the amiable and respectable qualities of the mind" is formed, who will say that there can be no friendship in business? Indeed, the broad, liberal spirit of Commerce is not inimical to, but thoroughly in accord with, that friendship which directly results from a "reciprocation of kind offices, or from a favourable opinion of the amiable and respectable qualities of the mind."

'We doubt whether there are many business men, even among those who protest to the contrary, who are not more or less influenced, directly or indirectly, in their business transactions by friendship for the men who represent the houses with whom they deal. How often is not a point strained to favour a traveller who has won the friendship of the dealer; while on the other hand advantage is taken of the very circumstance overcome in the case just referred to, to "turn down" a [illegible]. Every traveller knows how strong this sentiment and custom is in favour of old houses of repute which have a position and a prestige that of themselves command a certain amount of respect and confidence, and how difficult it is for young houses to conquer this prejudice and to win a place for themselves. The young traveller who loses sight of the fact that friendship plays an important part in business will quickly find that he is at a disadvantage with those rivals who do make friends of their customers.'

THE RUSKIN MEMORIAL.

Some interesting information is now to hand regarding the monument which is in course of preparation for the burial-place of John Ruskin in Coniston Churchyard. The monument (the design of Mr. W. G. Collingwood of Coniston) is a tall cross of the type lately revived from ancient models of the age before the Norman Conquest. This early English model has been adopted, in the belief that Mr. Ruskin himself, if it was a question of one form of headstone rather than another, would have chosen something of the kind. The cross is of the hard green stone of the neighbourhood, supplied from the quarries of Tilberthwaite, not easy to carve, but likely to last practically for ever, and not liable to chip or lose its pleasant grey-green colour. It is slender and tall, but standing not more than 9 ft. from the ground. The base is cut into the three Calvary steps, as they are called, usual in such monuments. On the side facing the grave and looking east at the bottom is a figure with a lyre, representing Mr. Ruskin's earliest works, poems, and the poetry of architecture. Above this is a panel of the interlaced work so often seen in such crosses, with his name and the dates 1819–1900, the only lettering thought necessary, for all the rest of the story is told in pictures. Over the name is the figure of an artist sketching, with the pines about which Mr. Ruskin wrote with such enthusiasm, and the range of Mont Blanc slightly indicated, and the rising sun, which was his device, on the cover of the first great work, 'Modern Painters.' Above is the Lion of St. Mark, for his 'Stones of Venice,' and the Candlestick of the Tabernacle for 'Seven Lamps.' The south side is filled with a scroll of his favourite wild rose in bud, blossom, and fruit, and on the boughs three of the creatures he wrote about with affection in 'Love's Meinie' and elsewhere, the squirrel and the robin and the kingfisher. This is meant to symbolise his interest in natural history. The west side, looking towards the mountains, represents his ethical and social teaching. At the bottom is the parable of the workmen in the vineyard, receiving each his penny from the Master — 'Unto this last.' Then a design of 'Sesame and Lilies,' and in the middle 'Fors Clavigera,' the Angel of Fate holding the club, key, and nail, which every reader of his work will easily recognise. Over that is the 'Crown of Wild Olive,' and at the top 'St. George and the Dragon.' The north side is a simple interlaced pattern. The crosshead on one side bears the globe, symbolising in those old sculptures the Sun of Righteousness, and the other side has a disc with the Fylfot, or revolving cross, accepted all the world over as the emblem of eternal life. The carving is purposely kept low and flat, bringing out the subjects by touches of shadow rather than in high surface relief. The work of cutting the monument is now in the hands of Mr. Miles, sculptor, Ulverston, who was employed on many occasions by Mr. Ruskin at Brantwood.

A RABELAIS DISCOVERY.

Herr Ludwig Rosenthal, a well-known German antiquarian and bookseller, writes to the Times from 16 Hildejard-Strasse, Munich, to inform us that he has recently come into possession of a hitherto unknown first edition of the fifth book of Rabelais's 'Gargantua and Pantagruel,' a duodecimo volume dated 1549, and printed probably at Lyons. 'What heightens the interest of the book,' Herr Rosenthal says, 'is that, not only its edition, but even its text is quite unknown, as I ascertain not only by my studies of Rabelais's complete works, but also by the assertion of Mr. Delisle and his assistant librarians. It is known that 11 years after Rabelais's death, that is in 1564, was published a fifth book of "Gargantua and Pantagruel," but its authenticity was always doubted. This doubt is now set at rest by my hunted-up original, whose text differs completely from the false edition of 1564.' This very interesting discovery of Herr Rosenthal's appears likely to clear up the mystery which has always surrounded the fifth book, as it has been known hitherto. It was doubted for several reasons, among the strongest being the fact that parts of it were evidently replicas or rough drafts of passages in the earlier books, and that it contained allusions manifestly later than the latest date which could be assigned for Rabelais's death. It has, however, been pretty generally accepted as being, at all events, mostly the work of Rabelais. 'The strongest argument,' Professor Saintsbury says in his article in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' 'and one which has never been attacked by authorities really competent to judge, is that the griffe de l'aigle is on the book.' If Herr Rosenthal's is the genuine version, then the other was probably put together after Rabelais's death with additions, possibly by the écolier de Valence to whom Du Verdier, the bibliographer of the 17th century, attributed its authorship.

A REMARKABLE ANCIENT LIBRARY.

The recent results of the excavations in the mounds of ancient Nippur in Asia Minor, carried on by Professor H. V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, have been much discussed. For eleven years Professor Hilprecht has carried on his archæological researches, but his last year's labours have been more fruitful than those of the previous ten years. They have been crowned by the discovery of the library of the ancient temple of Nippur, which is regarded as probably the most important event in the history of archæological research. Dr. Hilprecht has given an interviewer some interesting particulars of his work.

The chief point to be remarked, he says, is the fact that they have found the first Babylonian temple library that has ever been discovered. Hitherto we have possessed nothing more than the knowledge of the probable contents of such a library from copies found in the royal library of Ashurbanapal, in Nineveh, which was discovered sixty years ago. This royal library, however, was a compilation of documents from all over Babylonia, so far as was at that time known.

In the library which was unearthed this year at Nippur were got for the first time an insight into the arrangement of the libraries of that early day, and the arrangement of the rooms, &c., and, what is of major importance, a knowledge of the literature of the period. Of special importance is the fact that the excavators have not only discovered a Babylonian temple library, but that it proves to be the most influential and important, as well as the oldest, in the whole country. No document discovered is younger than 2200 B.C.—that is, about the period when the first blossom of the Nippurian civilisation was cut off by an invasion of the Elamites, who descended on Nippur, sacked the city and carried away many of its treasures. After that event Babylon superseded Nippur as the chief city or metropolis of Northern Babylonia.

So far, only one wing of the library has been excavated. Nearly 18,000 documents have been rescued from the ruins this year. The size of these inscribed clay tablets varies from 1 by 2 inches to 1 by 1½ feet. Unfortunately for the decipherer, they were made of unbaked clay, and therefore suffered considerably by the collapse of the building and by the humidity of the ground. But all the fragments have been secured.

The library of the temple at Nippur was lost to human knowledge about the time that Abraham went out of Ur into Palestine, and it gives us a clear historical setting for that important event. Many other customs and religious notions which existed among the Hebrews will find here their just interpretation. We have known all along too little of this period. Now, competent critics will be able to tell what is purely Babylonian and what is purely Hebrew.

The records from the library at Nippur are now on the way from Bassora to Constantinople, where they will arrive in the course of six months.

OVERWORKED WORDS.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—In reference to an American's disapproval of overworked and misapplied words, may I be permitted to draw attention to the increasing misuse of the adjective 'invalid' when the plural possessive noun 'invalids'' is intended? Even in this analytical age, wine merchants boldly advertise 'Invalid Port' and 'Invalid Stout'—liquors as deleterious, one would imagine, as arsenical ale. Last Thursday's papers stated that 'the Tsar was able to sit in an invalid chair'—poverty can scarcely be assigned as an excuse for not providing a sound one. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes remarked that a man who committed verbicide was capable of homicide.

Yours truly,
F. C. Burleigh.

IN MEMORIAM.

Dr. Samuel Highley.

The City Press reports the death, which occurred a few days ago at the Charterhouse, where he had spent the last days of his life, of Dr. Samuel Highley, who many years ago was well known in the scientific world as a publisher and an indefatigable and clever author. The Doctor was the first to place on the market a cheap and effective microscope for students, and, in addition, he similarly was among the first to appreciate the capabilities of the magic lantern for the illustration of lectures and demonstrations.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. Charles R. Spence, who was a partner in the late firm of Messrs. Andrew Stevenson & Co., The Mound, Edinburgh, and who recently commenced business on his own account at 10 to 13 Waverley Market there, has assumed as a partner Mr. William Phimister, jun., lately with Messrs. R. & R. Clark. The new firm, to be known as Spence & Phimister, have secured a lease of the premises at 68 Princes Street, recently occupied by Messrs. Keith & Co., whose business of magazine and newspaper agents they have also acquired.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The "Oresteia" of Æschylus.' Translated and Explained by George C. W. Warr, M.A., with illustrations. In the world of letters we witness a curious and interesting phenomenon. While many men call out against the improvidence of wasting time on the classics, scholars are more and more realising the need of translations from Greek and Roman literature. Mr. Allen's new series of renderings from the Athenian dramatists promises to 'meet a long-felt want.' For, as Professor Warr remarks, 'considering the obvious advantage offered by the combination of translation with commentary, it is strange that the field of Greek and Roman literature has been so far neglected in this respect that the classics—the basis of literary education in our schools and colleges—are still, so to speak, sealed books for all but students of Greek and Latin.' This quotation gives the reason for bringing out the present series, which starts admirably with Professor Warr's volume. A difficult task has been admirably accomplished. The commentary is particularly valuable, and the book is enriched by several illustrations of interest. Even Greek scholars will find the series valuable, and to readers of English desiring the real flavour of the Greek it is indispensable.

From the same.—'A Tragedy of Errors,' by Geraldine Hodgson. If there is not very much plot in this story, such as there is has been excellently constructed to show off the characteristics of a very human group of people. We have met with the rigidly righteous Miss Vibart frequently before in the paths of fiction, and are quite well acquainted with her hard, uncompromising method of treating delicate lovable little girls, but here the situation has its fresh attraction, and the woes of poor Griselda, the affectionate solicitude of her nurse, and the weakness of Mr. Vibart, with the corresponding sternness of his sister, provoke our sympathy and interest, and we read the account of 'A Tragedy of Errors' to its melancholy close. The story is pleasantly and unaffectedly narrated, and it possesses such a strong vein of humanity that it is certain to have a powerful effect on the susceptibilities of the reader.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'By an Unseen Hand: a Story of the Secret Society known as "The Ragged Thirteen,"' by Edwin Hughes. The title of this story sounds promising for those who are partial to sensational fiction, and as we have a mysterious murder in the opening chapter the mind eagerly looks forward to further excitements, which are certainly not wanting. The father of the supposed narrator of the story is in some dark fashion connected with the crime, and he hurriedly leaves England, not however without making ample provision for his son, who eventually goes into residence at Oxford, where further startling discoveries await him. The interest of the story now rapidly increases, and we soon reach fever heat. We are told of the curse of the 'Ragged Thirteen,' and of the dire disasters that follow this terrible denunciation. What its effects are in the present narrative we shall not say. Nothing could be more pleasant for the reader who likes his nervous system thrilled than to find out for himself. We have also received from the same publisher 'A Case of Blackmail,' by Charles K. Moore. It is a stirring piece of sensational writing, which should have the effect of stimulating the most jaded literary appetite. These volumes, we should mention, are the latest issues in Arrowsmith's well-known Three-and-Sixpenny series.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The Englishwoman's Year-book and Directory, 1901 (Third Year of New Issue),' edited by Emily Janes. The twenty-first annual issue of this interesting and useful volume presents little difference from its immediate predecessors. A calendar has been added, and this seems the only change. 'The Englishwoman's Year-book' is an admirably arranged work, which the rapidly-advancing position of the sex renders every year more and more valuable. In its present edition it has been thoroughly brought up to date by a sympathetic body of contributors.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Book of Daniel,' with introductory notes by the Rev. S. R. Driver, D.D. Each successive volume of the Cambridge Bible for Schools confirms our early judgment regarding the excellence—that is to say, the usefulness—of the series. The latest volume maintains the high standard set at the beginning. On Dr. Driver's qualifications as a Biblical critic it is happily unnecessary to dwell. Wherever men are interested in the Higher Criticism as applied to Bible studies his name is familiar and his work appreciated. In this little book his knowledge is brought to bear in the happiest manner on the studies of the young. The arrangement is exceedingly convenient. Opening with a chronological table, the editor next gives a luminous introduction of over a hundred pages, in which not only the history of the book of Daniel is traced, but the political history of the time as well. Then come text and notes, and finally an appendix giving the inscription recording the vote of thanks to Eumenes and Attalus passed by the council and people of Antioch, and an index. The book is invaluable to students.

From the same.—'An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek,' by Henry Barclay Swete, D.D. With an Appendix containing the letter of Aristeas, edited by H. St. J. Thackeray, M.A. This is emphatically a book for students, and for students alone. Briefly stated, the volume is the outcome of a desire to place within reach of the student a manual giving the information needed as an introduction to the Greek versions. Dr. Swete is unnecessarily modest. 'A first attempt,' he writes, 'is beset with uncertainties. Experience only can show whether the help here provided is precisely such as the student needs, and whether the right proportion has been preserved in dealing with the successive divisions of the subject.' The work is arranged in three parts, dealing respectively with the history of the Greek Old Testament and of its transmission, the contents of the Alexandrian Old Testament, and the literary use, value, and textual conditions of the Greek Old Testament. Scholars and students will at once understand what a vast mass of information is necessarily arranged under these separate headings; but only an examination of the book itself will enable them to appreciate the skill and erudition brought to bear on the several parts. Dr. Swete's task has been more or less that of a pioneer, but there is no suggestion of the pioneer in the amplitude of the knowledge displayed and the lucidity with which the information is presented. The work, indeed, is one which students of its subject cannot afford to neglect.

From the same.—'Songs of Modern Greece' with introductions, translations, and notes,' by G. F. Abbott. It was a happy idea to render into English a representative collection of modern Greek songs, and it has been very happily carried out. Mr. Abbott explains that his object has been to produce 'a work of interest both to the lover of folk-lore in general and to the classical scholar in particular.' In this aim he seems to us to have succeeded. The little book is divided into two parts, the first part containing Historic Ballads and Choral Songs, and the second Idylls and Love Songs, Dancing Songs, Miscellaneous, and Distichs. The renderings run smoothly and freely, and to each section Mr. Abbott furnishes a luminous introduction. There are also several pages of notes, and an admirably compiled index. The book is one of no small interest to the general reader as well as to the specialist.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'As a Watch in the Night: a Drama of Waking and Dreaming in Five Acts,' by Mrs. Campbell Praed. Though a little disappointing in the opening chapters—for the characters are by way of being artistic and clever, and their conversation hardly justifies their pretensions—further investigation shows this to be a very powerful novel. Indeed, we doubt whether Mrs. Campbell Praed has ever written anything better. To the ordinary reader of fiction there may possibly be a little too much mysticism in the story, and the scenes of ancient Roman history, which reveal Dorothea Queste's visionary attributes, will to such a one prove somewhat heavy and wearisome, but those of a more studious, earnest tendency will heartily enjoy the book from end to end. The character of Dorothea is beautifully delineated—practically she occupies the whole of the canvas—and the two sides of her nature, the intellectual and physical, are brought out with fascinating clearness. Like so many women novelists, however, Mrs. Campbell Praed fails somewhat to indicate the deeper personalities of her male characters. It is not altogether easy to understand the overpowering influence exercised by Gavan Sarel over Dorothea. There were his physical attributes, certainly, which were magnificent, but a woman of Dorothea's temperament, sensuous though it might be under an exterior of tranquil womanliness, would surely require more than this—an exhibition of intellect of which there is little to show in the story, though much, no doubt, is hinted at. Gavan Sarel, in short, is conceived on very romantic feminine lines. He is that fine handsome man of determined will-power whom no woman can resist, there being some magnetic influence in his manner and appearance that renders them all helpless. Thus Dorothea discards the love of a really good man and throws herself into the arms of this being, who is merely actuated by an admiration for her physical beauty; and for him she sacrifices her entire life. The story, as we have said, is remarkably clever, and in her treatment of the powerful situations that arise Mrs. Praed shows masterly skill. Notably is this the case in the scene where Alaric Queste reveals the secret of his mother's infamy in the presence of her honest admirer, Lord Ravage. Mrs. Campbell Praed during her long career as a novelist has never shown to better advantage.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark.—'William Herschel and his Work,' by James Sime ('World's Epoch-Makers' series). An account of the life and work of Herschel is very properly included in Messrs. Clark's series of 'The World's Epoch-Makers.' Mr. Sime, too, has performed his task in a manner for which we have nothing but praise. Particularly interesting are the early chapters, describing Herschel's family, his own education, and the beginning of his scientific work. Later chapters necessarily treat that work in a popular fashion, for the book is meant for our friend the man in the street, who must be humoured if he is to be interested; but throughout the right spirit is maintained, and we close the book not only with a knowledge of the man, but with a proper appreciation of the value of his achievements. To say this is to say that Mr. Sime has succeeded in an undertaking which was by no means as easy as it seems.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Oliver Cromwell,' by Theodore Roosevelt. The author of this volume has an exceedingly attractive personality to deal with, and greater difference of opinion probably exists at the present day in regard to the Protector's good and bad qualities than at any previous time. On the whole we can compliment Mr. Roosevelt on being fair and impartial; he tells the story of Cromwell's life soberly and honestly, and as a rule is content to allow the events of history to speak for themselves. Summing up the character of the great Roundhead leader, he says: 'Oliver surely strove to live up to his lights as he saw them. He never acted in levity, or from mere motives of personal aggrandisement, and he saw with sad piercing eyes the dangers that rolled round the path he had chosen. He acted as he did because he conscientiously felt that only thus could he meet the needs of the nation. . . . There are dark blots on his career—especially his Irish policy—but on the whole he was a mighty force for good and against evil, and the good that he did, though buried for the moment with his bones, rose again, and has lived for ever since, while the evil has long withered or is now withering.' Mr. Roosevelt also points out that Cromwell's career forms an able refutation of the opinion so frequently expressed that the best of all possible governments would be a benevolent despotism. Never was there a despot who so earnestly strove to benefit the people, and yet his efforts resulted in failure. 'The truth is that a strong nation can only be saved by itself, and not by a strong man, though it can be greatly aided and guided by a strong man.' Portraits of Oliver Cromwell, Archbishop Laud, John Pym, Prince Rupert, John Hampden, King Charles I., John Milton, Richard Cromwell, and others adorn the volume, and there are also many other illustrations.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—Messrs. Dent have added two more volumes to their excellent 'Temple Primers' series. These are 'The Civilisation of the East,' by Dr. Fritz Hommel, translated by J. H. Loewe, and 'Plant Life and Structure,' by Dr. E. Dennert, translated by Clara L. Skeat. Of the great value of these works it is unnecessary to speak, and we need only note their appearance. It should be added, however, that both are illustrated, and that in the volume on Plant Life a full index is included.

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co.—'Fairy Tales of the Brothers Grimm.' A new translation by Mrs. Edgar Lucas, with illustrations by Arthur Rackham. 'Grimm's Fairy Tales' may always be relied upon as an absorbing Christmas attraction for young people, but when produced with such pictorial embellishments as Mr. Rackham's fertile fancy can give rise to, the combination is irresistible. Something also should be said for Mrs. Lucas's translation, which very faithfully represents the original. A more suitable paper might have been used, but that is our only cause for dissatisfaction in what is actually a very artistic production.

From Mr. Henry Frowde.—'The Treasury of American Sacred Song, with Notes Explanatory and Biographical,' selected and edited by W. Garrett Horder. In the present revised and enlarged edition of a work which met with much acceptance on its first publication, both in this country and America, there have been added specimens of writers whose works have appeared since the former edition was issued, together with a few poems whose claims for inclusion were previously overlooked. As now presented, the volume should appeal to a large circle of readers. Like everything which proceeds from the Oxford Press, it is extremely well 'got up.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'The Inhabitants of the Philippines,' by Frederic H. Sawyer. In many respects the war waged by the United States with the Filipinos resembles our own struggle with the Boers, for in each case a long and protracted campaign is the result; while there are also other points of similarity. Thus Mr. Sawyer's work, which is practically a defence of the natives of the Philippines, based on long residence among them, is particularly interesting, and the fact that he disagrees in his opinions with the majority of recent writers on the question renders his book all the more novel and attractive. There are no less than forty chapters in the volume, which are arranged under the various headings of introductory and descriptive, historical, social, geographical, and the inhabitants of the Philippines. This last section is again subdivided into three parts, respectively discussing the inhabitants of Luzon and adjacent islands, the Visayas and Palawan, and Mindanao, including Basilan. There are also a number of appendices furnishing statistics in regard to the exports, population, value of land, &c. The information that Mr. Sawyer furnishes in these chapters of the character of the Philippine Islands and their inhabitants is extremely valuable, and it has the further recommendation of being supplied in a highly readable, well-arranged form. The volume is also rendered additionally attractive by a large number of illustrations, including several portraits of native men and women, and a capital map.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'The Life of Dwight L. Moody' (the official authorised edition), by his son, W. R. Moody. This is an interesting biography of a man who was above everything earnest in good works. The determination of Mr. Moody, his vigour in prosecuting any course of action that he had planned out for himself as the right thing to do, his general cheeriness of character, stand out very prominently in this account of his life, and show very markedly the attributes that contributed to his great success. Mr. W. R. Moody takes us over the entire events of his father's life, and is perhaps more successful in showing us the man as he actually was than a more pretentious writer would have been. There are over eighty illustrations in the volume, including a large number of copyright portraits and views. Among these are several of Mr. Moody himself.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Public Speaker' compiled by F. Warre Cornish, M.A., Vice-Provost of Eton College. This stout volume of nearly six hundred pages contains an almost bewildering variety of pieces suitable for school recitations. There are pieces from the Greek and Latin classics, from German, French, Italian, and English classics, as well as from the works of authors who have not yet established a right to be called classical. The selections include specimens of all ages, from Homer to Rudyard Kipling in poetry, the drama, oratory, &c. The selections are given in each case in the original, so that the book may be regarded as a sort of epitome of culture—suitable for schools. The extracts are made with judgment, and the book, we imagine, has come to fill a vacant place. It is well got up, the print, though small, being clear, and the binding as substantial as a thing meant to be handled by boys ought to be.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'The Angel and the Demon, and other Stories,' by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler. These stories, reprinted from the British Workman, represent Miss Fowler's earlier essays in the writing of fiction; indeed, as she herself tells us in the preface, they were among her first attempts. It is interesting to note the unsteady beginnings of a talent which may now be said to have reached its full development. But apart from this they are really engaging in themselves, and should succeed in pleasing a wide circle of readers.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Free to Serve: a Tale of Colonial New York,' by E. Rayner. The trials that afflict the sweet heroine of this story arise from a particularly selfish brother, who, being in deep distress himself, uses her as a means of obtaining his release. In other words, he makes her liberty dependent on his paying certain money to the captain of a sailing vessel upon which he and his sister have shipped for New York; and being unable, on their arrival at that port, to fulfil his part of the agreement, the maiden is sold as a bond-servant. Happily she falls into good hands, though her exceeding beauty brings many troubles upon her. All this, it need hardly be said, happens many years ago—to be exact, at the commencement of the eighteenth century. The story has both its quiet and exciting moments, and the adventures of poor Adeline Nevard are calculated to elicit the warm sympathy of the reader. It is in many respects an exceedingly well-told narrative.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Sons of the Covenant: a Tale of Anglo-Jewry,' by Samuel Gordon. This story is a strange mixture. It has its good and bad attributes, but the two are so inextricably entwined together that it is not easy to define them. At the outset it seems strange that a little boy of very poor parentage should be adopted by a rich lady as the result of one meeting, no questions being asked, no inquiries made, but the whole transaction carried through off-hand. Of course it may be said that Phil Lipcott bore a remarkable likeness to the lady's dead son, but this scarcely seems sufficient explanation of the situation. Then the rich lady and her surroundings appear to be somewhat unusual. She has neither the style nor the manners of a cultivated woman, moving in a good class of society. These are a few of the failings of the story as it at first strikes us. On the other hand, the author has managed to incorporate with his story, inexperienced in certain phases of life as it may be, such an amount of healthy good-tempered human nature that the interest of the reader is bound to be arrested. What matters it if he knows from the first that Phil Lipcott is destined, in the most transparent way, for Elfie Elkin, and that Leuw Lipcott is destined for Dulcie Duveen—that the plot is totally wanting in finesse throughout?—the humanity of the story attracts him, and he will laugh over the peculiarities of Mrs. Diamond and her husband, the broad, good humour of Uncle Bram, and the cockney characteristics of 'Yellow Joe.' In other words, if he be not too great a stickler for the 'unities' of fiction, he may extract a large amount of pleasure from this novel.

From Messrs. Henry Stevens, Son & Stiles, 39 Great Russell Street, W.C.—'Cabot Bibliography, with an Introductory Essay on the Careers of the Cabots, based upon an independent Examination of the Sources of Information,' by George Parker Winship. This work took its rise, we are told, from a small Cabot bibliography prepared at the suggestion of Mr. W. E. Foster, of the Providence Public Library, for use during the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of John Cabot's visit to North America. The light that is here thrown on the lives of the men who revealed to England and to Europe the westward passage to America renders the book exceedingly interesting, and in this respect the introductory essay detailing the career of the Cabots and the controversies that arose from their discoveries will probably constitute to many readers the most attractive portion of the volume. The bibliography, however, has special features of its own which, while they will no doubt be fully appreciated by a smaller number of readers, are infinitely more valuable as bearing on the region of research. The entire volume shows no little industry and pains-taking inquiry.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—'Book Prices Current: a Record of the Prices at which Books have been sold at Auction from October 1899 to July 1900, being the season 1899–1900.' The general characteristics of this work, its extreme usefulness and general reliability, are now well known, nor does there seem any necessity further to allude to the matter. It will be sufficient to say that the present volume fully maintains the excellence of its predecessors. In his preface the editor, Mr. J. H. Slater, points out that the past season can boast of no great sales like those of the Crawford, Makellar, Ashburnham, or Morris libraries in previous years. It is probable that the war has had considerable influence in causing owners of valuable libraries to hold back for a more favourable opportunity; but, however this may be, it is certain that the close of the year 1899 and the first few months of this were not distinguished by the sale of many books of very great interest. The prices realised were also below the average. On the other hand, it is satisfactory to note that when any really high-class works have been offered for sale there has been no diminution in competition, their full value being obtained. Among the more noticeable auctions of the season have been the Tixall Library, formed originally by the first Lord Aston, Ambassador to Spain in the reign of James I.; the Fielding sale—so called, though it was composed of books from various sources; the sale of the stock of Messrs. H. S. Nicholls & Co.; Colonel Francis Grant's fine collection of English classics, chiefly of the last century; the Peel heirlooms, sold by Messrs. Robinson & Fisher on June 12 and following days; and two or three miscellaneous sales of considerable interest. A feature worthy of mention is that there has been a fall in the value of the minor productions of Stevenson and Kipling. It may also be pointed out that the present issue of 'Book Prices Current' contains—as contrasted with previous volumes—an unusual number of early printed books with woodcuts, English classics of the eighteenth century, works of the old dramatists, and presentation copies bearing the author's inscription. The work as a whole is a wonderful treasure-house of facts for the book-lover.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'A Cabinet Secret,' by Guy Boothby. Mr. Boothby can scarcely be complimented on this novel. Signs of hurried writing and careless workmanship appear on almost every page, and the story as a whole is ill-planned and unskilfully executed. The period of the narrative is supposed to be at the commencement of hostilities in South Africa. A secret society in Italy thinks the opportunity a good one for waging a war of destruction in England. A beautiful Countess, her father, and supposed cousin are therefore sent over to this country to take the necessary steps. These steps are apparently the kidnapping of various members of the Government and other distinguished officials. First Sir William Woller, on the point of sailing from Southampton to take command of the troops in South Africa, mysteriously disappears; then the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Right Hon. Benjamin Castellan, is missing; the Commander-in-Chief follows; and, finally, the supposed writer of the narrative, Sir George Mandeville, another Cabinet minister, is spirited away. Subsequently all these gentlemen find themselves prisoners on a steamer in the North Sea, their gaolers being the Countess's father and cousin, and one of the party learns that a project is on foot to blow them up with an infernal machine, the ship having previously been deserted by the conspirators and their crew. Happily this never comes off, but an exciting chase between the steamer and a yacht ensues, the Right Hon. Benjamin Castellan, with the Commander-in-Chief and General Woller acting as engineers, while Sir George Mandeville officiates at the helm. The steamer escapes mainly through the sudden appearance of a thick fog which is responsible for the total wreck of the yacht, and all hands on board the latter are drowned, including the rascally conspirators. Strangely enough, the beautiful Countess, whom we had thought to have left at her magnificent house in Park Lane, seems also to have been on board, and hers is the only body recovered. And so we come to the close of this very inconsequent narrative. The book is childish and absurd.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

 In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimètres.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—34 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.

December 28, 1900.

'No authors ever had so much fame in their own lifetime as Pope and Voltaire.' So said Dr. Johnson. Whether they have as much nowadays it would be difficult to say. But if not, that may be the fault of the present generation rather than of those two great writers. With regard to Voltaire, no less competent an authority than Mr. John Morley has said that 'When the right sense of historical proportion is more fully developed in men's minds the name of Voltaire will stand out like the names of great decisive movements in the European advance, like the Revival of Learning or the Reformation.' Villemain said of his writings that there is not one which does not bear the mark of his sojourn in England. This at least should give him an interest in the eyes of English literary students. Surely the great French writer has strong claims upon our notice if only for the pains he took to master our language—so difficult for a foreigner—and to study our literature; who, after a few months' residence here, was able to read and enjoy Milton and Shakespeare, and even to translate portions of 'Hudibras' into French verse, and who entrusted the first edition of his own poem, 'La Henriade,' to a London publisher. These remarks are suggested by the appearance in the Revue Franco-Allemande of a little-known composition by Frederick the Great, called 'Éloge de Voltaire,' written in the camp at Schatzlar in Bohemia between two battles, read by the King's order at an extraordinary public meeting of the Berlin Royal Academy of Sciences, November 26, 1778, and subsequently published in a very limited edition, copies of which are extremely rare.

After sketching Voltaire's early years, Frederick refers to Voltaire's residence in England, and remarks that it was only after his return to France 'the Parisians, enlightened by the suffrages which a nation as learned as it is profound had given to our young author, began to think that a great man had been born in their midst.' He tells how Mme. de Châtelet, having read Voltaire's philosophical works, wished to make his acquaintance. The desire to learn and the eagerness to examine the few truths within the grasp of the human intellect riveted the bonds of this friendship and rendered it indissoluble. Mme. de Châtelet immediately abandoned the 'Théodicée' of Leibnitz and that philosopher's ingenious romances to adopt in their stead the circumspect and prudent method of John Locke. . . . Cirey soon became the philosophical retreat of the two friends. There they composed, each alone, works of various kinds, which they communicated to each other, seeking by reciprocal remarks to bring their productions to the highest degree of perfection to which it was possible for them to attain.' Voltaire was more affected by this friendship than by his election as one of the forty Immortals of the French Academy, or his nomination as historiographer of France, and he preferred the seclusion of Lunéville and Cirey to the splendours of Versailles. Death, however, put an end to this literary friendship. 'So,' says the King, 'M. de Voltaire passed his life between the persecutions of the envious and the enthusiasm of admirers, without the sarcasms of the former humiliating him or the applause of the latter increasing the opinion he had of himself. He was content to instruct the world and to inspire the love of letters and of humanity by his works. Not satisfied with giving moral precepts he preached beneficence by his example.' Here the King instances the kindness of Voltaire to those unfortunate Protestants the Colas family and Sirvens, and his righteous indignation at the execution of the Chevalier de la Barre.

Frederick gives details of Voltaire's abuse of coffee. 'When Voltaire was writing his tragedy "Irene,"' he says, 'he passed whole nights in recasting his work; and, either in order to keep awake or to reanimate his ideas, he made an immoderate use of Caffé (sic); fifty cups per day scarcely sufficed. This liquor which set his blood in the most violent agitation caused him such a prodigious excitement that in order to calm this species of hot fever (cette espèce de fièvre chaude) he had recourse to opiates, of which he took such strong doses that far from alleviating his malady they hastened his end.' When we recall what bitter things Voltaire had said and written of Frederick, and how Frederick had replied to the poet's querulous complaint that he was old and worn, the study under consideration becomes particularly interesting if not instructive.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

With the present number Mr. J. A. Steuart relinquishes the editorship of the Publishers' Circular, which he has held for ten years. The proprietors take the opportunity afforded by his retirement to record their high appreciation of Mr. Steuart's services, and to express their gratification at the fact that the period of his control ends in the most cordial relations.

Mr. Murray has almost ready the work on the painters of Florence on which Mrs. Ady has for some time been engaged.

Mr. Michael Davitt is writing a book on the South African War from the Boer point of view.

Lady Ridley, the wife of Mr. Justice Ridley, has written a new novel, entitled 'Anne Mainwaring,' which Messrs. Longmans & Co. will publish. Her previous essay in fiction was some four years ago, before her husband was made a judge of the High Court, when, as Mrs. Edward Ridley, she issued 'The Story of Aline,' a book which enjoyed a fair amount of popularity.

Mr. Joseph Hocking is still hard at work on his new story, which is to begin immediately in the British Weekly. Mr. Hocking is striking out on a new line. Although the tale will deal with the ordinary life of a Methodist minister in a large manufacturing town in Lancashire, giving the humours and pathos of that life, it will have a strong element of romance. Of Mr. Hocking's novel, 'The Purple Robe,' published in May last, nearly 20,000 copies have been sold.

'The Call of the New Century' is the title of a series of papers now appearing in the Sunday at Home. The January paper is by the Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, on 'The Men who shall Make the Century.' The next will be by the Bishop of London, on 'The Relations between the Nations.' Other contributors are the Bishop of Derry, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. Silvester Horne, and Rev. R. J. Campbell. Professor Moule is contributing to the Sunday at Home a series of short meditations, entitled 'Thoughts for the Day of Days.'

The Printers' Pension Corporation has during the past year been fortunate in receiving several generous donations to its funds. We are glad to note that the latest instance is that of a transfer of stock to the trustees by Mr. C. E. Layton (formerly of the firm of Messrs. C. & E. Layton, Farringdon Street, E.C.) to establish a 'Charles Edwin Layton Pension' of the annual value of £20. To mark his approval of the provident side of the Corporation's work, Mr. Layton has stipulated that the recipient of this pension must have subscribed annually for twenty-five years. Received at a time when the candidates are unusually numerous, this addition to the list of pensions of the Corporation is extremely welcome.

At the last monthly meeting of the board of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, Mr. C. J. Longman in the chair, a sum of over £106, including the usual Christmas grants, was voted for the relief of fifty-seven members and widows of members. An additional donation of £50 from Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., being a sum received by them on account of a breach of copyright, was duly announced, also the receipt of seasonable gifts from several friends of the Institution, for which in each case the directors returned their best thanks.

No one seems to have noticed how nearly General Mercier's skeleton scheme for the invasion of Great Britain coincides with a scheme put forward by the author of an anonymous book published in the height of last summer, 'The New Battle of Dorking.' The author of that book was Lt.-Col. F. N. Maude, R.E.

The January Leisure Hour discusses a question of some literary interest—'Who was "Robin Adair"?' The writer claims to dispose effectually of a statement repeated in many literary handbooks and encyclopædias, both as to the hero of the song and its authorship. The article is illustrated with a portrait of the true 'Robin' and other pictures.

We understand that 'A Little History of the West of England,' just published by Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons, is written by Mr. Arthur L. Salmon, author of 'West Country Ballads' &c.

The question recently raised in our columns as to whether the Americans did not excel us in the manner of producing books has been taken up, we notice, by the Daily Telegraph which recently sent a representative round the trade to ascertain the views of publishers and others in regard to this matter. There was a fairly general consensus of opinion that our friends across the Atlantic were entitled to the credit given them by Mr. Shaylor. One English publisher admitted that there was 'more originality and thought in their format,' and as proof of this he took down several American books from his shelves. 'They spend more time and money on a book than we do,' he went on. 'They will give twenty dollars for a cover design, and another twenty to the man who produces the brasses (stamps) to impress it. If we give a sovereign for the design and another for the brasses, we think we are doing the thing stylishly.' On the other hand, as showing that an artistic, well-designed cover has little influence in promoting the sale of a book, the experience of another English publisher may be cited. He produced a work which in his opinion was quite equal to anything of its kind in America, and he only sold four copies of the edition!

But then the contents may have been uninteresting. We are not told anything about this. Even an artistic cover will not bribe the reading public into purchasing a worthless volume. After all, you do not get a book for the covers, but for what lies between them. The article in our contemporary touches upon other interesting features of the American book trade. 'There are greater opportunities for booms,' it is pointed out, 'on the other side of the Atlantic than here, and the 'cute American publisher naturally adopts somewhat different methods to our own. He does not depend on libraries to take a certain number of most of his books. He aims for the book-buyer. His volumes are produced with a smaller margin of profit, the cost of production is greater, and he looks to an occasional boom to compensate him for the deficiencies on the unsuccessful books. It follows, therefore, that publishing is much more speculative than in England, and small firms "go under" in far greater numbers than they do here. When a book "catches on" hopefully, the publisher "booms it for all it is worth." His newspaper advertisements, his posters, his catch-lines would be regarded by staid English houses as verging on the tricks of the mountebank; but they do their work.'

Attention is also directed to the device of sending copies broadcast to men of prominence, and inviting their opinions, which are then prominently displayed in the advertisements. The method has lately been introduced into this country, but has not been exploited to any great extent. The general deduction to be gathered from the article apparently is that American publishers are particularly 'smart,' and have exceptional facilities, not current in this country, for pushing their wares.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

'Seconde Patrie,' the latest but by no means the least of Jules Verne's 'Voyages extraordinaires,' has just been published by J. Hetzel & Co. complete in one volume royal octavo, with 12 chromotypographs and 68 illustrations by Roux, and two maps. This is the forty-eighth story of travel and adventure we owe to M. Jules Verne's inexhaustible creative powers, which are as extraordinary as the voyages he relates. The rising generation ought to feel very grateful to an author who has done so much, not simply to amuse, but also to instruct and edify it. Other welcome books for the young in the 'Collection Hetzel' are: 'L'Héritage de Jean,' par Pierre Perrault, illustrated by G. Roux; 'Les Nièces de M. Burke,' par M. de Beauchène, illustrated by G. Carrier, a tale the scene of which is laid in England, and whose diversified plot is as full of smiles as tears; 'Le Tour du Globe d'un Bachelier,' par André Laurie, which is an addition to this author's stories of college life in many lands; 'La Bande Arlequin,' by O. Le Roy, with illustrations by Guydo, a humorous addition to the 'Bibliothèque Blanche'; and three new volumes of the series of 'Albums P. J. Stahl': 'Mlle. Lili, maîtresse de la maison,' par L. Froelich; 'Alexandre le grand,' by the same favourite artist; and 'Pierrot à l'école et chez son ami Paillasse,' by G. Fath.

That pleasing story-teller and talented artist A. Robida has written a story called 'Le Capitaine Bellormeau,' which he has illustrated with 65 designs in black and white, and 14 coloured plates, and which Librairie A. Colin publish in a quarto volume, artistically bound. In the 'Bibliothèque de Romans pour les Jeunes Filles,' this firm issues three new volumes: 'Châteaux de Cartes,' by Jean Thierry; 'Vers la Vie,' by Charles Recolin; and 'Chez les Corsaires,' by Ariste Lycoffon.

One of the most important epochs in Italian literary history is the Quattrocento, or fifteenth century. M. Philippe Monnier has endeavoured to determine the character and work of that diversified and interesting century in 'Le Quattrocento, essai sur l'histoire littéraire du XV^e Siècle Italien,' to which he has added a very full and valuable bibliography. The work, forming two octavo volumes, is published by Perrin & Co., who also announce 'Française du Rhin,' a new story of life in Alsace at the present day. The heroine, Lina Blaumann, remains French in spite of all temptations to the contrary.

The Courrier de Lyon announces that two prizes of 1,000 francs each and another of 500 francs are offered by anonymous donors for the best essays on the insects which attack books and on the best means to employ for their destruction. M. Henry Martin, of the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal de Paris, is instructed to give all the information possible on the subject.

The ninth and concluding volume of 'Autour de la Méditerranée,' by Marius Bernard, containing the Holy Land and Egypt, is just published by H. Laurens. The complete work forming nine volumes contains 1,100 illustrations.

THE EARLIEST SCOTTISH NEWSPAPER.

In Scotland two hundred and fifty years ago, we are reminded by a writer in Good Words, at a period of the intensest religious and political excitement, there were no papers at all, but news travelled across the border in small pamphlets generally called diurnals, and bearing such names as 'Mercurius Populus; or, News declaring Plain Truths to the People'; 'Mercurius Acheroniticus; or, News from Hell brought fresh to Town,' &c. &c. Among these queer old prints appeared on Monday, December 1660, the Mercurius Caledonius, a small eight-page booklet, the first newspaper printed in Scotland, and the source from which springs this great roaring torrent from the press that floods us to-day. The paper is given in the article as it appeared on the morning of publication. The full title of the edition deserves to be accurately copied:

Mercurius Caledonius comprising
the affairs now in agitation in Scotland with
A survey of Forraign Intelligence.
Conamur Tenues Grandia.
From Monday Decemb. 31, to Tuesday, Jan. 8th, 1661.

The opening paragraph is headed 'Edinburgh,' and begins:

'Our clouds are dissipate, the rays of Royalty, darts from the breasts of Scot'smen, not being in the power of the most skillful Artificers of Treason, to stave off our allegiance, which was bravely manifested in the reception of His Majesties High Commissioner the Earl of Middleton; (who according to the grander of his State) was welcomed seven miles from the city, by numerous troops of Nobility, Gentry and Citizens, all in such equipage, as became both Court and Camp.' What follows is concerned with affairs of Church and State, with the actions and end of Montrose and other matters of historic interest. The paper, as the writer in Good Words remarks, is an interesting document viewed with a knowledge of the intervening period, which enables the reader to note wherein public feeling was led astray, or what contributed to turn men towards measures for their real interest, and to protect from delusions that would plunge them into ruin. The history of Scotland's deathly struggle from the date of the first 'Mercurius Caledonius' places the reader in a school of experience, making this old newspaper, what records of the past must ever be, our best instructors for the future.

LANG ON HOWELLS.

Some Criticisms and a Moral.

Mr. W. D. Howells having once more, so to speak, hoisted his flag in Harper's Magazine, Mr. Andrew Lang promptly returns to the attack. Mr. Howells, as is well known, is the chosen advocate of the realists, or, as he prefers to call them, the naturalists, of whom Count Tolstoi is the chief. Mr. Lang ranges himself under the banner of the romancists, whose king is Scott. The Easy Chair (which is to say Mr. Howells) is, remarks Mr. Lang in the January number of Longman's, 'still interested in new novels.' It asks if 'Ibsen, and Mr. Hardy, and Zola, and Mr. James are going strong. They are not going so very strong. Mr. Howells despairs of making the E. C. understand "how wholly these writers are forgotten." This is a humorous exaggeration. "The cry is now for historical romances . . . upon a simple formula of bloodshed and arch-heroism in either sex, and history Bottomwise translated out of all likeness to human events . . ." This, for all that I know, may be true of recent American historical novels, though, as far as I have seen them, I do not recognise the description.'

Referring to Mr. Howells's condemnation of the present American taste for historical fiction, Mr. Lang says: 'We cannot understand Mr. Howells, or any sane critic, to condemn all historical novels as inevitably bad. The consequences would be too far-reaching. The Epic and the Drama were the novels of the Greek and the Elizabethan ages; they held the popular place which novels hold now. Mr. Howells will not, surely, condemn Shakespeare and Homer because their history is "Bottomwise translated," and because blood is shed in their pages. Take "Macbeth." There is bloodshed enough, and the historical part is quite absurd. Lady Macbeth was a most devout and charitable woman: her lord was an able, energetic, and philanthropic ruler, who, perhaps, insisted too strongly on Legitimist principles as then understood. Duncan was the real usurper, and was by no means an old man, but in the prime of youth. How he "happinit to be slain" is uncertain, but it certainly was not under Macbeth's roof that he fell. The whole affair of Banquo and Fleance is a mere myth, invented in the interests of the House of Stuart. History cannot be more topsy-turvy, and blood is not more freely shed by Mr. —— or Mr. —— than by Shakespeare. Yet "Macbeth" is highly esteemed. I need not push this argument further; neither bloodshed nor false history makes historical fiction bad. If they do, the Waverley Novels and "Esmond" must bow the head to Mr. Matthews's new book, and to Mrs. Edith Wharton, for both the Waverleys and "Esmond" are full of bloodshed and false history, and "arch-heroism."

'Mr. Howells's real objection, I conceive, is moral. He wishes us to live in "the living present," the fleeting hour. But we do that "all the time," except in the rare hours which we give to history or to historical fiction. Is it wrong to allot that amount of space to the past? By so doing we increase our outlook on human life, while, if we do not, we cannot see the actual hour in its true proportions.'

The American new-born love of American historical romances is, Mr. Lang thinks, a very pleasant and hopeful symptom. 'The hurrying moment with its noise is extremely and conspicuously present to Americans. It appears that they, too, like to have an hour's holiday, now and then, from daily tasks and daily newspapers. They have some interest in life as their colonial fathers lived it, and especially, no doubt, in the great events and great men, and simple modes of existence, at the time of the War of Independence. But the public do not care for history books; they desire to see their ancestors as they walked and talked, and dressed, and fought, and made love.' Twelve years ago Mr. Lang indited sonnets to Mr. Stevenson and Mr. H. R. Haggard expressing special delight, we remember, in the bloodshed of 'King Solomon's Mines.' He has not been converted from his heresies by Mr. Howells, and now that Harper's has again raised the Tolstoi flag lively entertainment may be expected.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING'S NEW STORY.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling's new serial 'Kim,' which begins in the January number of Cassell's Magazine, is the longest story we have yet had from its author's pen. Hitherto his longest connected story has been 'The Light that Failed,' but that was only about three-fifths the bulk of the new tale, which contains about a hundred and twenty thousand words. It is not a story of South Africa, but of India, for Mr. Kipling has returned to his first love, the land of his birth. The story opens at Lahore, and the whole of it is played out in India, over which 'Kim' and the Lama wander.

Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling, who is supplying some most original illustrations to 'Kim,' is a retired member of the Indian Civil Service. The eldest son of a Wesleyan minister, he was educated at Woodhouse Grove School. For ten years from 1865 he was Architectural Sculptor at the Bombay School of Art, and for eighteen years Principal of the Mayo School of Art, and Curator of the Central Museum at Lahore. In 1886 he was given the C.I.E., and in 1893 he retired from the public service. It may be mentioned that the designs have been modelled in clay relief and thence reproduced. One of these pictures has been printed on art paper, and is issued in the January number of Cassell's Magazine. Mr. Edwin Lord Weeks, who is also illustrating 'Kim,' has made a name by his pictures of India. A full-page illustration from his pencil will appear in the January instalment. In addition to the illustrations by Mr. Lockwood Kipling and Mr. Edwin L. Weeks, Mr. H. R. Millar is providing a number of designs.

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Sammels & Taylor, of Oxford Street and Fleet Street, inform the trade that on or about January 9, 1901, they will open new premises at 7 New Broad Street, E.C.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Sway of Philippa,' by James Blythe Patton. The heroine of this novel, Philippa Shirley, has a sweet, interesting personality, and the account of her doings is certain to have many attractions for readers. The book is scarcely of the sensational order, but it possesses abilities of character portraiture, that will more than counterbalance the want of thrilling incident. Among readers of quiet, sober fiction, it should undoubtedly become a great favourite.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Churches of Rouen,' by the Rev. Thomas Perkins, M.A. This a capital little work of description which fully maintains the excellent reputation achieved by previous volumes in the series known as 'Bell's Handbooks to Continental Churches.' The three chief ecclesiastical edifices of Rouen are, of course, the Cathedral Church of Notre Dame, the Abbey Church of St. Ouen, and St. Maclou, and to a history and description of these the major portion of the book is devoted, but space is also found in an appendix for some reference to the minor churches of Rouen. The illustrations, with which the book is so lavishly provided, form a substantial aid to the author's descriptive powers, and the work is not only interesting in itself, but provides a serviceable guide to the traveller.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Francis Hutcheson: his Life, Teaching, and Position in the History of Philosophy,' by William Robert Scott. This volume took its rise from what may be termed very humble beginnings. It was felt that Hutcheson's life in Dublin previous to his appointment as Professor at Glasgow must, from the character of his social surroundings, have possessed many interesting features, and the first conception of the book arose from a desire to cast some light upon this portion of his career. Subsequently, as material accumulated, the scope of the undertaking was enlarged until it assumed its present proportions. In the various chapters the author deals with Hutcheson's early years, life in Dublin, influence as a Professor, literary work during the Glasgow period, personal characteristics, and Hellenic and philanthropic ideals, while several sections are devoted to an account of his philosophy, and in the two concluding chapters Mr. Scott summarises the general conclusions which appear to him to be deducible from the material contained in the earlier chapters. Throughout no attempt has been made to assign Hutcheson's position in the History of Philosophy beyond such inference or argument as would naturally spring from a recapitulation of the nature of his life and work. The volume is written with admirable simplicity and clearness, and forms a deeply interesting study.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—'Britain's Sea-Kings and Sea-Fights,' by B. Fletcher Robinson, Commander Claud Harding, R.N., Tighe Hopkins, F. Norreys Connell, Captain H. Garbett, R.N., Herbert Compton, Major G. Le Mesurier Gretton, A. Hilliard Atteridge, and others. The interest of this volume is of the vivacious kind, and the articles are well aided to this end by the plentiful supply of illustrations which adorn almost every page. These are the work of Charles W. Wyllie, F. H. Townsend, W. H. Margetson, Wal Paget, Gordon Browne, H. M. Brock, and others. There are also numerous reproductions of famous pictures, old prints, plans, trophies, and relics. The daring deeds and gallant exploits recounted in the volume are certain to be hugely appreciated by a wide circle of readers, and the pictorial accessories will give intensity to their fervour. The book, well written, beautifully illustrated, and artistically bound, is exceptionally well suited for presentation or prize purposes.

From the same.—'Our Bird Friends: a Book for all Boys and Girls,' by R. Kearton, F.Z.S. Mr. Kearton has not only an intimate acquaintance with bird life and habits himself, but he is able in the most delightful manner to convey much of his knowledge and enthusiasm to the reader. One great reason of his success is that he is content to use the simplest of language in describing the results of his observations in clear plain English without fanciful adornment of any kind. In the work of description he is ably aided by his brother, Mr. Cherry Kearton, whose photographs, taken direct from nature, form no mean attraction of the volume. The book lays no claim to the character of a scientific treatise, but simply in a pleasant chatty manner sets forth the leading characteristics of bird life in the hope that young readers may be encouraged to take an interest in the subject, and will learn to observe and inquire for themselves. Mr. Kearton so unaffectedly yet earnestly displays the fascinations of his pursuit that we can imagine there are few youngsters who will not most readily respond to his appeal.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'The Inimitable Mrs. Massingham: a Romance of Botany Bay,' by Herbert Compton. At the end of the eighteenth century, according to Mr. Compton, there lived in Arundel Street, 'over by the Strand,' an apothecary named Zachariah Snydercombe. To him one day there came an applicant for lodgings. This was Mr. James Matheson, apparently a very well-to-do man, who was accompanied by his beauteous daughter. So fascinating was she that she speedily made a captive of young Robert Borradaile, Snydercombe's nephew, whereby she incurred the deadly enmity of Patty Snydercombe, Robert's cousin. Matheson eventually turned out to be a forger of bank-notes, and, mainly on the information of Patty, was arrested, while urgent search was made for Gretna, the daughter. Thanks to Robert's assistance, she escaped, but he himself was caught and unjustly sentenced to ten years' transportation. The scene afterwards changes to Botany Bay. Here some remarkable events occur in Robert Borradaile's life, and when Gretna turns up to claim him he is no longer free to respond. Gretna then returns to England, and on the next occasion we hear of her she is the famous actress, 'the inimitable Mrs. Massingham.' Such is a brief outline, without disclosing too many secrets, of this extremely interesting story. Mr. Compton has thrown himself thoroughly into the spirit of the period he describes, and his narrative possesses such a happy undercurrent of romance that it is certain to charm a wide circle of imaginative readers.

THE ABOVE IS AN ILLUSTRATION TO MR. RUDYARD KIPLING'S NEW SERIAL, "KIM," COMMENCING IN THE JANUARY NUMBER OF "CASSELL'S MAGAZINE." IT IS ONE OF A SERIES EXECUTED FOR THE STORY BY MR. LOCKWOOD KIPLING, C.I.E., THE AUTHOR'S FATHER. THE ILLUSTRATIONS HAVE BEEN MODELLED IN CLAY, AND REPRODUCED BY PHOTOGRAPHY. ALIKE FOR NOVELTY OF THE METHOD AND ARTISTIC EXCELLENCE THESE PICTURES ARE LIKELY TO ATTRACT GENERAL ATTENTION. IT IS THOUGHT THAT READERS WILL BE GRATIFIED TO HAVE THE ILLUSTRATION AS A SEPARATE PLATE.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—To their excellent 'Temple Primers' series Messrs. Dent have added two useful little volumes on 'Chemistry—Systematic and Theoretical,' by William Ramsay, D.Sc. Admirably arranged and up to date, they furnish within the compass of pocket-books a wonderful mass of information. Dr. Ramsay writes lucidly and never wastes a word.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'The English Utilitarians,' by Leslie Stephen. Those who know Mr. Stephen's masterly work 'History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century' will cordially welcome the present work, which may be regarded as a sequel. It covers a wide field, and though not exhaustive is yet so full of detail and so close in reasoning that we cannot hope to do justice to it in the space at our disposal. It deals first with such deep far-reaching questions as political conditions, the industrial spirit, social problems, philosophy, psychology, and religion, and then in detail with the theories of Bentham, John Stuart Mill, Ricardo, and their disciples. These names suggest heaviness, but Mr. Stephen is erudite without being heavy. To the average reader the personal parts will be by far the most interesting, inasmuch as they show in the author not only a sound grasp of the subjects dealt with but a rare gift of portraiture. It would lead us too far to discuss with any fullness the various opinions and propositions set forth, and we must therefore content ourselves by saying that the work is really a treasury of suggestive and often recondite thought on economics, philosophy, and religion. No student should be without it, and to the general reader it may be commended as affording a rare combination of solid matter and delightful manner. 'The English Utilitarians' is the best book of its kind that has appeared in England for years.

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co.—'Sintram and his Companions,' by De la Motte Fouqué. A new translation by A. M. Richards, with illustrations by Anna Richards. Nothing could be better than the production of this volume. The translation has evidently been guided by an able and sympathetic hand; the illustrations are well drawn and admirably in keeping; and the limp leather binding is just what the ardent book-lover would select for a work of this description. It forms a noteworthy contribution to the artistic volumes of the season.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'A Detached Pirate,' by Helen Milecete. There is much vivacity in this story, which is not always distinguished by good judgment. But fiction-lovers are not particularly squeamish now-a-days, and so long as they obtain original sensational [illegible] And here they cer[illegible] have good value for their money. The heroine is an officer's wife who finds the part of a woman so cumbersome to her development that she takes to running about London in man's attire, visiting theatres, music halls, and such like, and eventually she launches out into furnished chambers of her own! The husband obtains a divorce, and the th[illegible] experiences occur which constitute the

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers. [illegible] the Emperor Frederick,' edited [illegible]

German of Margaretha von Poschinger, with an introduction by Sidney Whitman. The value of this work as showing the part the late Emperor took in political matters is undoubtedly very great. It also throws increased light on his powerful military capacity. Mr. Whitman in his task of selecting from the German original such portions as seemed most likely to interest English readers, and in eliminating as far as possible all second-hand comment and appreciation, has displayed both discretion and skill, and his volume should attract a large number of readers. Commencing with the childhood and early education of the Emperor, the author traces his career during a life of much honourable ambition and activity. The Prince's student days at Bonn University, his engagement and subsequent wedding, the accession and coronation of King William I., and the appointment of the Bismarck ministry, the influence of the Crown Prince as constitutionalist, his home life, part played in the Austrian War, Franco-German campaign, &c., are admirably described in language that never savours of exaggeration or partiality. The writer in short recounts clearly and simply the chief events of the Emperor's life, and is content to allow the reader, alone and unaided, to form his judgment from these. A capital portrait adorns the frontispiece.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Queen versus Billy, and other Stories,' by Lloyd Osbourne. It is not often that a man, either white or coloured, courts his death, but such practically was the action of poor Billy, the pathetic hero of the first instalment in this entertaining volume of stories. Billy, a curly-headed youth, was handed over by the natives of Sunflower Bay, in the Solomon Islands, as the miscreant who had murdered a white trader; and although the captain of the British ship sent to exact vengeance for the crime was well convinced that poor Billy was only being made a scapegoat for the rest of the tribe, all that the sailors could get the boy to confess was 'White man no good; me kill him.' The death execution was deferred, a short cruise was taken, during which the condemned man became a prime favourite with all the crew, but all to no purpose; not a word could be got from him but 'White man no good; me kill him.' At length, so great was the compassion felt, that opportunities were afforded him to escape, which he completely ignored, and he was then deliberately taken on shore and sent on a false errand while his escort, greatly relieved at having got rid of him, returned to the ship. But alas! it was no use, for poor Billy shortly afterwards was seen to be swimming in the wake of the vessel, and had to be reluctantly made prisoner again. All kindly efforts failing, he was ultimately taken back to Sunflower Bay, and, to the deep distress of the entire ship's crew, the sentence of death was carried out. This semi-humorous, semi-pathetic story is a fair type of the ability characterising the volume generally. All the contents are distinctly clever.

From the same.—'Mr. Dooley's Philosophy,' illustrated by William Nicholson, E. W. Kemble, and F. Opper. The reading public is by this time fairly well acquainted with Mr. Dooley's views on things in general, but, none the less, many people will be pleased to have a further supply of his frank, amusing criticisms. The attractions of the volume are further increased by the illustrations, many of which are exceedingly comical. Among the subjects upon which the old gentleman waxes eloquent are 'American Abroad,' 'War and War Makers,' 'Modern Explosives,' 'The Chinese Situation,' 'Polygamy,' 'Kentucky Politics,' 'Christian Journalism,' 'The Negro Problem,' and 'The Education of the Young.' The results of conducting a paper on Christian principles was that the Topeka man, 'skinning over th' gossip about Christyan citizenship an' th' toolchest iv pothry, says: "Eliza, here's a good paper, a fine wan, f'r ye an' th' childher. Sind Tommy down to th' corner an' get me a copy iv th' Polis Gazette."'

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'A Woman's Burden,' by Fergus Hume. Mr. Hume's story opens on Waterloo Bridge—a very suitable locality in which to start a sensational novel. Here an old gentleman narrowly escapes being robbed and murdered, and he takes the young woman who has protected him back to his lodgings. It would seem, however, that no spirit of benevolence or philanthropy has actuated this course, for he soon shows himself to be a very cruel, wicked old gentleman whose gaze has a mysterious influence in subduing his captive. All this is told in a prologue, and the after chapters recount the events that spring from this strange meeting. We have known Mr. Hume to be in better all-round form, but so far as a fertile invention goes he has been particularly prodigal of his gifts in the present volume. The book is simply full of thrills from cover to cover.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Malice of Grace Wentworth,' by R. H. Heppenstall. This novel is distinguished by a vigorous style and some degree of constructive ability. The characters stand out with well-defined clearness, and their actions are so interwoven as to make up an interesting plot. Murder is now so common a foundation for the erection of fiction that it is about time it should be losing something of its stability, but here it is certainly employed to good purpose. Mr. Heppenstall has written a very absorbing story.

From Mr. Norman MacLeod, 25 George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.—'Caraid nan Gaidhael' (The Friend of the Gael), a choice selection of the Gaelic writings of the late Norman MacLeod, D.D. of St. Columba Parish, Glasgow. According to the late Professor Blackie, Dr. MacLeod, father of the better-known Norman, sometime of the Barony Church, Glasgow, wrote the most idiomatic Gaelic we possess in recent Celtic literature. This work, of which we are glad to see a new edition, exhibits him at his best. The book is racy of the soil and will delight every genuine Highlander. Lovers of the Gael owe no small debt of gratitude to Mr. MacLeod, the well-known Edinburgh bookseller, for the unselfish loyalty which prompts him to publish this and other Gaelic works that would otherwise be inaccessible. The volume, it should be added, includes a memoir of the author by his son, the late Dr. Norman MacLeod, of Glasgow.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Pharaoh's Daughter, and other Stories,' by William Waldorf Astor. The majority of the stories in this volume are constructed on similar lines. An old army officer sitting in his rooms in Piccadilly reading Thiers' 'Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire' falls asleep over the book and has the battle of Austerlitz enacted before his sight; another man, who displays a marvellous knowledge during some excavation work of the position of the palaces and streets of ancient Rome, and in his private life is exceedingly cruel and sensuous, proves to be none other than 'Nero Claudius Cæsar Drusus Germanicus' reproduced in modern form, but with all his old barbaric attributes; and so forth. The stories are all deeply interesting, and they have a weird uncanny colouring that adds greatly to their general effect. The volume is illustrated.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'In the Web of a War,' by H. Prevost Battersby. The author of this volume is unfortunate in that so many previous works have appeared on the South African campaign, and readers, we fancy, are becoming a little weary of the war correspondent's account of hostilities. On the other hand, there is always interest in the evidence of an independent observer, and in some respects Mr. Battersby traverses fresh ground. These letters—the majority of which we believe have already appeared in the Morning Post—take up the events of the war from the time of Lord Roberts's landing at the Cape, and carry the author's observations and experiences up to Midsummer Day of this year. The three concluding chapters are devoted to a consideration of 'the Remaking of an Army.' With regard to the Royal Army Medical Corps the author makes the following pregnant observations: 'The ambition of the army surgeon is, as a rule, to be as like a soldier and as unlike a doctor as the fates will permit. As a rule, too, he succeeds. He is a good sportsman, ready for any form of amusement, indifferent to danger, easy-tempered, and generally to be relied upon in the treatment of straightforward ailments. He is, in short, just what might be expected from the conditions of his existence—speaking always, be it remembered, of the average, not of the rare exception who is able to get out of the ruck and devote himself to some special study. And, as he stands, he may very well be accepted by those who praise him. If another stamp of man is wanted he must be sought in some other fashion. The prospects of the R.A.M.C. and the conditions of its life will not attract the men who make the epochs of surgery. How should they, make them as tempting as you will? It is not money that allures genius, but opportunity. The student who feels the future within him will stay where he has the largest scope for study. You will not find him in the army under any heading.' Mr. Battersby's volume is not remarkable for much literary style, but his descriptions and the arguments he deduces from his facts show him to be a man of keen observation and well-balanced judgment. There are several illustrations, including a frontispiece portrait of the author.

From Mr. John Murray.—'On the Wing of Occasions,' by Joel Chandler Harris. A thorough spirit of adventure which distinguishes this volume of stories is sure to be highly relished by the reader. The contents mostly concern the great Civil War between South and North in America. The connecting link between the stories is Lawrence M'Carthy, at one time a captain in the navy, then head waiter in a New York hotel, afterwards landed proprietor through the Will of a scout, and at all periods a striking and distinct personality. The account of the events in which he took part may be relied upon to grip very thoroughly the attention of fiction-lovers, and by its graphic vigorous portrayal to obtain their complete approval.

From the same.—'The South African War, 1899-1900: a Military Retrospect up to the Relief of Ladysmith,' by Major S. L. Norris. This volume is strictly confined to the military aspects of the war, and although the author is necessarily indebted for much of his information to the various newspaper correspondents, English and Continental, the mere facts of their reports have been taken, unfettered by personal opinion or bias. The various points which Major Norris considers are: the causes that led to the war, the Boer tactics and their forces, the British army in South Africa, the Defence of Natal, the composition of Lord Methuen's column, the battles of Majesfontein, Stormberg, and Colenso, the fighting round Spion Kop, and the siege and relief of Ladysmith. The criticism is pointed and outspoken, but we think in almost every case is impartially administered. The book is deeply interesting from a military point of view, but would have been even still more attractive had it carried the account nearer to the present time. It contains a number of valuable appendices touching on the conventions of Pretoria and London, the National Union's Manifesto, the Majesfontein, Stormberg, and Spion Kop despatches, with cablegrams regarding the same, and several maps. Among the many books on the South African campaign we know of few that are so thoroughly informative.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Later Love Letters of a Musician,' by Myrtle Reed. Love could surely find no more graceful expression than in Miss Reed's charming letters. Each is characterised by a refined tenderness that seems to pulsate through every line. It is as if an exquisite melody were being played on the heartstrings of a sensitive, deeply emotional nature. Though the book is full of sentiment, this is so purely unforced as never to become mawkish or stilted. We had sincere praise for the first volume of these love letters, and a further collection has only intensified our admiration for the author's insight and the delicate character of her work.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'From Valet to Ambassador,' by Philip Treherne. The leading character of this book is valet to a nobleman who ruins himself in the City. He then becomes confidential adviser to a millionaire named Bollingbroke Barnes. The guests with which this gentleman fills his house are a strangely diversified lot, and it is in a description of their doings that the chief interest of the story consists. Barnes is a queer sort of fellow, with no reverence for the relics of antiquity, but he knows how to entertain, and crowds of fashionable people flock to his receptions. Eventually, on the initiative of the Under Secretary for Central Africa, he goes on a diplomatic mission to Mangaboo, and having succeeded in his negotiations with the dusky monarch of that kingdom, chiefly through the display of many gorgeous, bright-coloured costumes, the confidential adviser is left as British Ambassador. Shortly after this the story comes to an end, Barnes having by this time changed, in the words of one of the characters, 'from a purse-proud, money-grabbing vulgarian to a high-minded, agricultural, contented human being.' All this is done through his marriage with one of the aristocracy. What becomes of the gentlemanly ex-valet is not stated, but we suppose that during his tenure of office at Mangaboo he had not completely lost sight of his own interests.

From the same. 'Nance,' 'Her Heart's Desire,' 'The Outcast of the Family,' and 'A Coronet of Shame.' These four stories, by Mr. Charles Garvice, the American novelist, show him to be a writer of much vigour, dramatic intensity, and power of characterisation. It is hard to say which is the best of the four; they are all good, and there is a strong family likeness between them. They are especially calculated to be popular among lovers of strong, rousing fiction, who are attracted more by liveliness of incident than any deeper analysis of the emotions. To such we can confidently recommend them.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Wellington's Men: Some Soldier Autobiographies,' edited by W. H. Fitchett. The extracts which make up this engaging volume are taken from Kincaid's 'Adventures in the Rifle Brigade,' Anton's 'Military Life,' Mercer's 'Waterloo,' and 'Rifleman Harris.' The selections seem to us to have been judiciously made, at any rate the result is a volume of rousing adventure. Mr. Fitchett is to be congratulated on yet another book which supplies a distinct want.

From Messrs. Rowland Ward & Co.—'After Wild Sheep in the Altai and Mongolia,' by E. Demidoff, Prince San Donato. It is not always that a tastefully produced work such as this reveals contents on closer investigation worthy of its handsome exterior, but on the present occasion the lover of sport will have every reason for congratulation. The volume is addressed, in the words of the author, to those enthusiastic hunters who 'have devoted the best years of their lives to the chase of wild animals in distant countries, and the naturalists, without whose aid the labours of the hunter, so far as science is concerned, might often be undertaken in vain.' Prince Demidoff tells the account of his travels in a simple, unostentatious manner that adds greatly to its interest, and that we are sure will be widely appreciated by sportsmen, who of all people in the world love plain, outspoken language. He has had many difficulties to contend with, seeing that the country in the matter of its natives, wild scenery, and flora and fauna has been little explored, but on the whole he has come out of the conflict with exceeding credit. His book will be found to possess extreme attraction for sportsmen, and towards this end the numerous and beautifully executed illustrations have no inconsiderable influence. There are altogether eighty-two of these illustrations, exclusive of a coloured frontispiece and a map.

New Editions.—From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Letters of Thomas Gray,' edited by Duncan C. Tovey, Vol. 1. Lovers of prose literature, and readers who relish the intimate personal note in great authors, will alike welcome the new edition of 'Gray's Letters' in 'Bohn's Library.' There was never a more delightful letter-writer than Gray, and in this new form his literary and personal correspondence will be a joy to many.—The new edition of 'Who's Who,' which Messrs. A. & C. Black publish, has been considerably enlarged. The biographies now include information regarding everybody who is anybody. Since most of the notices are 'supplied' they may be taken as authentic.—When in doubt consult 'Hazell,' is good advice, and speaking generally it were superfluous to praise the new edition of 'Hazell's Annual' which Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney have just brought out. We are sorry, however, to find the section devoted to literature so poor and so inadequate. It would be better, in our judgment, to omit all reference to books and authors than to present such a list as is given in the new issue.—All boys and most men will be glad to have the new edition of 'The White Company,' by A. Conan Doyle, which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have brought out, with illustrations. No livelier tale of adventure could be desired.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have published 'Mr. Isaacs' as the first volume in their new issue in a uniform binding of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's novels. Considerable attention has evidently been devoted to the production of this series, and in the matter of general 'get up' it could scarcely be improved upon. A portrait of Mr. Crawford is given with this volume.

From The Little New Zealander (Dean & Son)

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

December 1, 1900.

From Handley Cross
(Chatto & Windus)

ONCE again we invite our readers to undertake with us a survey of what is generally and rather vaguely called Christmas literature. To the popular imagination a Christmas book is a book with pictures, and now, as in former autumns, picture-books abound. Some of them illustrate the alphabet, gently leading the young by unsuspected paths towards a thorny knowledge. Some give information regarding games for young and old; others are art-books in the true sense; and more describe adventures of all imaginable kinds in all quarters of the globe. The Christmas story-book as a literary performance seldom ranks high. Occasionally it happens that a Stevenson condescends to exercise his golden art for the entertainment of the young: but that is a rare piece of luck, and must certainly be accounted the notable exception. In the book for young people the story's the thing: and so long as it is sufficiently thrilling it may be crude and ill-written, may, in a word, break all literary canons, and yet bring joy to hundreds. We have travelled far since the days of the 'Literary Souvenir' and 'The Keepsake.' Even 'A Christmas Carol' seems to belong to antediluvian history, so great is the change which has come over our manners and our tastes. Eminent novelists no longer write the Christmas book. They say it does not pay them, and in any case the writers who produce it are not in the first flight of story-tellers.

All the same it has considerable merit and a quite amazing variety. The remark we made on a previous occasion may well be repeated, namely, that this year, as usual, there is something to suit all tastes and all pockets: stories of perilous adventure for boys, tales of domestic interest for girls, fine art books for the connoisseur, sermons for the serious, and miscellanies too numerous to mention for the person of discursive or undecided taste. As things are now, one year's Christmas books differ very little in general character from another year's Christmas books. One thing we note with a little regret—to wit, that few new writers of real promise present themselves. We do not say or insinuate a word against the old. Favourites of long standing deserve our gratitude; but it is only natural that writers who have for fifteen or twenty years gone on producing their half-dozen books apiece each season should begin to show exhaustion and be, in the language of the street, a trifle stale. In going through this season's books we have noticed something of that staleness, and hence regret that no new hands are appearing. We think publishers would be wise in making a vigorous search for freshness. Christmas literature has grown to such proportions, and is so important a department in publishing and bookselling, that it would be highly impolitic to allow it to decline from lack of judicious nursing. In the department of the novel the publisher has to take what is given and pretend to be satisfied; but the Christmas book is still largely in his own control, and he may make it pretty much what he pleases. The best method of improvement is to introduce fresh blood.

As regards production we have to accord general praise to the season's books. Publishers are fully alive to the importance of pleasing the eye in binding, type, and illustration. Here and there a surrender to the spirit of cheapness has marred the appearance of a volume. This refers especially to the illustrations, which are not always such as will appeal to a reader of taste and imagination; but, on the whole, we think that the specimen illustrations which by courtesy of publishers we are able to present in this number indicate that the standard is well maintained. We attach great importance to pictures. It happens, not entirely we fear to the good of literature, that the mass of readers represents what has been tersely and ironically called School Board culture. In a recently published story the hero makes a fortune by means of a weekly penny paper appealing to those fed intellectually on that curious product, and we are led to infer that the matter supplied is not of a high order. It is to such readers that the Christmas tale must in the main make its appeal, and its chances are enormously enhanced if it be attractively illustrated. Books have now to be published at so low a price that the publisher cannot in general afford to embellish them with the work of famous artists: but while that is likely to be increasingly true, it would be a gross error to resort to the method of cheap and nasty. Publishers are not resorting to that method. On the contrary, many of the works which have passed through our hands this season have been remarkable for the taste and skill displayed in their productions. We have again to note that some of the prettiest volumes of the season are reprints.

The Gift-Books of the Season

Mr. GEORGE ALLEN.

OLD English Singing Games, by Alice B. Gomme, illustrated by E. Harwood. Considerable service is rendered to the cause of recreation for children by such a book as this. These ten singing games, played in England and Scotland probably for generations, are, like other good things, in danger of being lost completely. Historically they deserve a better fate, and from the educational point of view they should be of the utmost assistance to the teacher. They are selected from a great number the author has collected in our towns and villages. As put forth in this volume, they should cause an eager rush on the part of the small people who see it to be at once initiated in their mysteries. Coloured pictures show children at play ; a page of large-type letterpress is given to the explanation in simple language of each game. Then there are the words that are sung in the game, and lastly the music. Every help is thus given to the easy acquiring of these amusements. As the author says in her preface, when once these games are known no modern substitutes can take their place. 'The reason is not far to seek. They supply the expression, by voice and action, of the dramatic and mimetic feelings which constitute so strong an element of child character, and now that fairy tales have ceased to be told by the fireside these traditional games are more necessary, as they alone are left to supply the love for the romantic which many children need.' Courtesy and self-restraint are instilled into the minds of the youthful players of these delightful games, which should speedily be played in every school and institute for young children in the land, if this book is appraised at its right value in the scheme of education. The illustrations are excellent—full of fun and fancy.

From The Poems of Edgar Allan Poe (Bell)

To the pretty 'Pensées' series Mr. Allen has added Thoughts from Ruskin, chiefly of an ethical character. Mr. Henry Attwell, the editor, supplies a biographical introduction in which the main facts of Mr. Ruskin's career are given, and a portrait of the great writer is given as frontispiece. Mr. Attwell seems to us to have made his selections with admirable judgment, and we commend his little book to our readers. It has one advantage in point of size—it slips easily into the pocket, and is therefore a companion of the handiest and most attractive kind.

Barbara's Song Book, by Cécile Hartog. Pictured by John Hassall. Words by Ellis Walton. This is one of the prettiest gift-books of the season for children. The pictures in colours are many, very pretty, very funny, and capitally drawn. The verses are simple and good. Here is a specimen from 'The Wind':

> But when he mounts the green hill's crest,
> And sends my kite above the rest;—
> Rocks sleepy birdies in their nest;—
> Brings father's boat from out the west;—
> Those are the times I love him best.

And then all of the poems are supplied with music; so that, given a kind elder sister and a piano, little voices may be lifted up merrily, and melody shall fill the nursery.

Annals of a Doss House, by Sydney Hallifax. Some of the papers that make up this volume have appeared in the columns of a daily newspaper, where they attracted much attention. Revised, and with the addition of several chapters, they well deserve the permanent form in which they are now given to the world. The East End is the scene, the submerged tenth their subject, and a realistic, painful picture is painted of the environment and the life. Mr. Hallifax is by turn caustic, humorous, pathetic, mordant, with always a tender sympathy for the poor and forlorn. He writes with deep knowledge for the people, he reproduces their speech, describes their way of existing, their struggle to survive, with a trenchant power. His book is a valuable contribution to the literature of our 'mean streets.' The portrait of John Drew, 'the Dosser's Bishop,' is a singularly striking one.

Mr. EDWARD ARNOLD.

Memories of the Months, Second Series, by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. The first series of 'Memories of the Months' soon went out of print, and, the type being broken up, further copies could not be had, though there were many requests for them. Sir Herbert Maxwell, encouraged by the success of the first, has now written a second series, and we predict for this an even greater fortune than befell its predecessor. There is an urbanity, a pliancy of style, that charms the reader even should he care little for the subjects dealt with. But these subjects touch a sympathetic chord in most of us, and upon them the author writes as few living writers can. Take the chapters on deer-stalking 'In Corrour Forest' and 'Another Day on the Hill,' they are simply magnificent sketches. Then there are the descriptions of salmon-fishing, equally as good. Above all, there is the love of nature that shines out on every page. Highland scenery has rarely been better delineated than by Sir Herbert. West Highland weather he likens to a shrew—none so captivating as a shrew in good humour. 'Highland weather is often shrewish enough, Heaven knows—shrilly, scolding in horrid blasts, and weeping profusely; but there is none like it when it is fine.' Sir Herbert protests against the killing of birds that fashionable women may be decorated, and pleads for mercy even for owls and hawks. This book, which is illustrated by several photogravures, should be in the hands of every lover of nature; it is altogether delightful.

Messrs. GEORGE BELL & SONS.

The Poems of Edgar Allan Poe, illustrated by W. Heath Robinson, with an introduction by H. Noel-Williams. Mr. Robinson supplies a number of fanciful illustrations for this pretty edition of Poe's poetical works, an edition which does the publishers great credit. Here and there it seems to us the illustrations are from an imaginative point of view rather far fetched, but as a whole they admirably reproduce the strange and often ghostly spirit of the poet. Mr. Noel-Williams's introduction is sensible, and compresses in an intelligent manner the biography of Poe. We must add that the singular 'Letter to Mr. ——,' and the essays on 'The Poet Principle' and 'The Philosophy of Composition' are included.

Pietro Vannucci, called Perugino, by George C. Williamson, Litt.D. ('Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series.) Hitherto the information available on Perugino, as far as English students are concerned, has been scanty and scattered. Mr. Williamson, therefore, has made a valuable contribution to art history in this scholarly work on the great Umbrian master, which is the first full account of his life and works in our language. It is full of superb photographs of the more famous pictures of the artist. Mr. Williamson's task was one of much difficulty. He had, for example, to travel from Paris to Marseilles, from Grenoble to Bordeaux, from Strasburg to Tarbes, to inspect all the parts even of one picture. The French occupation of Italy was the cause of this. Before 1796 Perugia was very rich in the works of Perugino, the city's adopted son. The French pillaged the churches and the public buildings, and the precious paintings were carried off to Paris, being subsequently distributed throughout Europe, often one portion of a picture going to one place and another to somewhere else, as our National Gallery witnesses in its examples of this artist. This is an indispensable book to students of art.

Sodoma, as Giovanni Antonio Bazzie is more generally known, is the subject of a monograph by the Contessa Priuli-Bon, in the same 'Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series. There is much uncertainty as to the facts of Sodoma's life. At one period, for instance, he disappeared for seven years, and the date given as that of his birth, 1477, as well as that of his death, 1554, are, it would seem, mere approximations. There is even doubt as to his birthplace, Siena being favoured by some, Vercelli by others. Vasari, his contemporary, disliked him, and in the first edition of his 'Lives' ignored him. After Sodoma's death Vasari inserted a short biography vilifying his personal character. The author of this monograph has, however, made very good use of what material exists, and her sketch of a man who was a great artist, but whose attraction lies not so much in what he really did as in what he might have achieved, should be a boon to all art lovers. Numerous photographic reproductions of Sodoma's pictures add to the value and charm of the volume.

Luca della Robbia, by the Marchesa Burlamacchi, illustrated. Luca della Robbia, one of the glories of Florence—a living writer calls his blue-eye medallions the soul of Florence—was born there in 1400, and died there in 1481. The sculptor was never married, but devoted himself to his relatives—particularly his favourite nephew Andrea, to whom he taught his art, and revealed the secret of his discovery of glazed enamel. His long life of labour was inspired by deep religious feeling, as his works show, and he had a special love for children. Such is the summary of this famous artist's life. The Marchesa Burlamacchi's biography is an accession to the sterling 'Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series. Its special value is the catalogue of the artist's works, or reputed works—for the authorship of some ascribed to him can never be finally settled—which is the most complete and accurate yet given to the English public. The illustrations are numerous, and, as usual in this series, beautifully reproduced.

Hockey, by Frank S. Creswell, late Hon. Sec. of the Hockey Association, illustrated. All-England Series. Hockey has advanced so much in popular favour recently that this edition of Mr. Creswell's manual, revised and enlarged by a County Player, comes at an opportune time. Everything that can be taught by book about the game seems to be included in the volume. The rules of hockey are appended, and there is a chapter on hockey for ladies, who have taken to the sport almost as eagerly as men. The illustrations are very useful, displaying a plan of the field, a specimen of back-handed play, legal and illegal, tackling, passing, and other mysteries of the science.

Out with Garibaldi, a Story of the Liberation of Italy, by G. A. Henty, with eight illustrations by W. Rainey, R.I. Few causes have swayed the imagination and sympathies of the English people more powerfully than that of Italy, 'rightly struggling to be free.' To-day she has her liberty, and the question What will she do with it? still waits the answer. The glorious dreams of her heroic sons who sacrificed themselves for her are, alas! far from realisation. The great story of Italy's emancipation can never grow old, and every boy should read Mr. Henty's stirring volume, capitally illustrated, in which once again it is put before us, and with an enthusiasm and dash that will hold its readers captive. The hero, Frank Percival, joins Garibaldi and his force of a thousand men, who, with the poorly armed irregulars who flocked to the great leader's standard, defeated a hundred thousand men, and freed Sicily. Frank's father and grandfather have been secretly imprisoned in the terrible dungeons of the Neapolitan Government. After many startling adventures and fights, in which he shows himself to be of the true British breed, he rescues them, and has the pleasure of assisting in the fall of Naples.

A Newnham Friendship, by Alice Stronach, with six illustrations by Harold Copping. A charming story of 'sweet girl graduates' and their life at Cambridge. Well written, the book shows a sense of character and of style. The friendship is between Carol Martin, a 'third year' student, strong-willed, practical, bright, clever; and Elspeth Macleod, a 'fresher,' who has risen to college from the Board school, and is shy, sensitive as all Highlanders are, and a dreamer. Her happiness at Newnham is marred for a time by her enemy Isabel Paget, 'the Duchess,' as she is called. Elspeth is, by her means, accused of writing some libellous parodies. The girls subsequently go out into the world, Carol becoming a lecturer and a hard worker in an East-End Settlement. Here she has to decide whether her occupations and marriage are incompatible—with what result may be guessed. A very attractive book, which we heartily recommend. Mr. Copping's illustrations are good.

Jones the Mysterious, by Charles Edwardes, with three illustrations by Harold Copping. The mysterious Jones is little Jim Bulkeley-Jones, a lad of ten years of age, who comes from India, where he was born, to be educated in England. Nana Sing, most devoted of Indians, accompanies him. On the voyage he endows the boy with the power of disappearing at pleasure. Naturally, when this power is exercised in the school, the whole establishment is unsettled, and the desire to send little Jones back again to India is strong and universal. How difficulties are got over, and Jones becomes as other youngsters, Mr. Edwardes relates well and amusingly. His book will be liked by boys.

In the Irish Brigade, a Tale of the War in Flanders and Spain, by G. A. Henty, with twelve illustrations by Charles R. Sheldon. Mr. Henty's books are an institution that to thousands of boys has for years seemed an integral part of the Christmas delights; and deep indeed would be the disappointment if the season came round with no book from him. But here he is, as picturesque, interesting, high-spirited as ever. The old swing and dash, the old sure instinct for the exciting and dramatic—all are present in this fascinating story of the Irish lad. Desmond Kennedy, who becomes a cornet in that famous Irish Brigade that for a century was the backbone of the French army. His prowess saves many of the French troops at the battle of Oudenarde; his talent for diplomacy finds scope in secret and dangerous missions to Spain; and in England he kidnaps the Prime Minister. All for the sake of the Pretender, whose zealous adherent he is. In 1703, when the story opens, and for years afterwards, as Mr. Henty tells us, Irishmen true to their religion were not allowed to fight for England, and they were forced consequently, if they wanted to see service, to fight for her enemies.

Boy Crusoes, a Story of the Siberian Forest, adapted from the Russian by Léon Golschmann, with six illustrations by J. Finnemore, R.I. This story breaks rather new ground for English readers. 'Robinson Crusoe' so enthralls the imagination of the Russian boy Sergius that he resolves to run away and imitate Defoe's hero. A friend, Vassia, eagerly consents to go with him. They go to work secretly, procuring guns, ammunition, provisions, and other things they think necessary, and they make off for a mighty forest. Their first night's experience cools their ardour, and they decide to return to their homes. But they lose themselves; every step takes them deeper and deeper into the forest. At last they find themselves on the shore of a lake, and here they build a hut in which to live and as a protection against wild animals and the terrible weather. The Crusoe life really begins. They have to hunt for food, to keep the wolves at bay; and here they stay for two years. By an accident they are discovered and rescued. Their experiences are recounted with much verve, and the book should be a favourite with English boys.

An Ocean Adventurer, or the Cruise of the 'Orb,' by Walter P. Wright, with four illustrations by Paul Hardy. A story of hidden treasure, and of cunning and villainy directed against its rightful owner. Frank Pingle tells his vivid story himself, and capital reading will other boys find it. Frank's father dies just as he is on the eve of possessing untold wealth, and he has time to divulge to his son only half the secret of its whereabouts. His enemy, Hallokar, captain of the 'Orb,' who knows some of the secret, entices Frank on board the ship for his own evil purpose. After many dangers to Frank, which do not end when the treasure is at last discovered, Hallokar pays the penalty of his baseness, and the boy returns to England, 'rich beyond the dreams of avarice.'

A Trek and a Laager, a Borderland Story, by Jane H. Spettigue, with four illustrations by Paul Hardy. Not a story of the Boer war this, but of pioneering in South Africa, and vigorously is it told. An English family of settlers have to trek, in consequence of a Kafir rising, and Humphrey Merrick—who is fourteen, but with all the spirit and resource of a man—passes through thrilling adventures during the journey. In time the family return, and when another rising happens they stick to their homestead, defending it against their foes. Humphrey and his sister are prevented by the natives from approaching the laager, and after a night encounter with a leopard they meet a large party of Kafirs. A fierce struggle occurs, which ends in the two being captured. But they soon escape, reach the laager, and Humphrey helps to hold it against a terrible attack. More follows—but we have said enough to show that this is truly a book for boys.

Tony Maxwell's Pluck, by Geraldine Mockler, illustrated by Paul Hardy. Tony is regarded by his brother and sister as a fool—but they make a big mistake. Their house is entered by burglars, all the plate carried off, and the police have to admit themselves helpless. Here is Tony's chance—he will discover the culprits. How he does so—recovering not only the family silver, but an old lady's diamonds—is well told in this entertaining volume.

Don Quixote of the Mancha, retold by Judge Parry, illustrated by Walter Crane. His Honour Judge Parry explains in his preface that he has tried to produce what has hitherto not existed—an abridgment of Cervantes' immortal story, giving in simple narrative form the adventures of Knight and Squire, with as much of the wisdom and humour of their discourse as would be within the grasp of the younger generation of readers. There are those, he says, who will consider such a task in the nature of sacrilege, or, at the best, verging on the impertinent, and he admits that he has much sympathy with their views. But objections of this sort will be swept away by the Judge's achievement. He tells the wonderful story as one who loves it would seek to tell it around his own fireside. The young will delight in it—it gives them an insight into, but does not exhaust, all the marvels of one of the world's masterpieces. When they grow up they can go to Cervantes himself; but here, in this version, they have a rich foretaste of the feast in store. Judge Parry tells the story of the adventures of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, not baldly, but with discrimination, admiration, rare appreciation, and thorough enjoyment, and he is generous enough to promise to relate the second part of the story at no very distant date. Abridgments are usually unsatisfactory, but in this Judge Parry has succeeded excellently, and produced a version, complete in itself, that should be in every child's library. The volume is enriched by the pencil of Mr. Walter Crane. Several of the pictures are in colours. All of them are a pleasure to the lover of the mad but noble Don. Mr. Crane seems to have been inspired by as great an enthusiasm as Judge Parry, and the result is some of his best work as an illustrator. A happier combination of author and artist has seldom occurred.

Our Darling's First Book, Bright Pictures and Easy Lessons for Little Folk. Founded on Miss Jennett Humphrey's 'Laugh and Learn,' this 'first book' is admirably adapted for its purpose. The coloured and black-and-white illustrations are very good, and will appeal to the children's sense of fun; while the lessons are arranged in an attractive form. Strongly bound, and with paper of stout quality, this book will make a welcome gift to the very little folk.

In the King's Service, a Tale of Cromwell's Invasion of Ireland, by Capt. F. S. Brereton, R.A.M.C., with eight illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. An animated story, bright with the flash of swords, resounding with the roar of firearms. Dick Granville, the young son of a Royalist who has lost his estates in Cheshire, goes over to Ireland with his father. Dick and his cousin Terence join a troop of horse when the Parliamentary army appears in the country; take part in the defence of Drogheda; escape from there by a miracle; and go through other marvellous happenings, in the course of which Dick earns unlimited glory by his prowess and resource. Dick overhears a plot to murder Cromwell; reveals it to the Protector; and so is the means of his father's estates being restored. This is the bald recital of only a portion of Dick's exploits—the full narration of them by Captain Brereton results in a first-rate story.

With Rifle and Bayonet, a Story of the Boer War, by Captain F. S. Brereton, R.A.M.C., with eight illustrations by Wal Paget. Captain Brereton's books have, with good reason, become increasingly popular with boys, and this, his latest, cannot fail to heighten his reputation among them. Its 'actuality' will be irresistible. They will follow Jack Somerton's career of glory in the South African war breathlessly, envious that his adventures were not theirs. Jack, whose father was a captain in the army, was destined also to follow the profession of arms, but a succession of incidents sends him to South Africa before he can go in for his army examination. Then the war breaks out, and Jack faces death many times in the course of the campaign. He is a despatch rider, he fights at Glencoe, is in danger as a spy, but is set at liberty by Mr. Kruger; is one of the beleaguered at Mafeking, helps in the defence of Ladysmith—there's no end to his adventures. Captain Brereton has a fluent, breezy, soldierlike style, and his gallant story is capitally illustrated by Mr. Paget.

Cynthia's Bonnet Shop, by Rosa Mulholland (Lady Gilbert), with eight illustrations by G. Demain Hammond, R.I. A pleasantly written story, with quiet humour and pathos in it, which should be in demand as a gift-book this season. Cynthia and Befind are two of the three beautiful daughters of a poor aristocratic Connaught family, who determine to earn their own living. With capital mysteriously supplied Cynthia opens a bonnet shop in London, which is a great success. Befind studies astronomy, the passion of her life. But Fate has other things in store for them, and very gracefully is their story told. Befind marries a professor of astronomy; while Cynthia discovers to whom she owes her bonnet shop. The pictures are well worthy of Mr. Hammond's reputation for this kind of work.

With Buller in Natal, or a Born Leader, by G. A. Henty, with ten illustrations by W. Rainey, R.I. Mr. Henty declares that it will be a long time before the story of the South African war can be written impartially. His book testifies to the truth of this on several pages. However, we look to him for tales of adventure, and he gives us one of full measure. He has limited himself to the operations in Natal, and takes as his heroes a little band of six English boys who leave Johannesburg on the eve of the struggle. Chris King is their leader, and they soon come into conflict with the enemy in the person of a Boer who refuses to supply food for the lad's mother and other refugees. Then the six go to Dundee, and offer their services as scouts to the ill-fated Sir Penn Symons, who accepts them. We are taken into the midst of the terrible struggles at Dundee; Elandslaagte, Spion Kop, and other battles, and are present at the relief of Ladysmith; and throughout the six distinguish themselves. A brisk story, alive with incident and moving adventures, every British boy will prize it. And the pictures are excellent.

Every Inch a Briton, a School Story, by Meredith Fletcher, with six illustrations by Sidney Cowell. This story is told by Taffy Llewellyn—called Taffy by his chums because that was not his name, in the pleasant way that schoolboys have—and very divertingly he tells it. We have the incidents of school life from the boy's point of view—the author manages to convey this point of view very cleverly—and, naturally, the narrative lacks the preaching element, the preternatural priggishness, that so often is thought a necessary portion of books for boys. We welcome the innovation. 'Every Inch a Briton' is not an elongated tract, but it points its moral for all that. Exuberance is the chief note; it is, however, the exuberance of honourable, healthy boyhood, and no boy can read the book without being the better for it.

The Adventures of Roly, by H. Elrington, with three illustrations by G. Demain Hammond, R.I. Roly is the only son of his widowed mother, and he is spoiled. She determines to take him in hand before it is too late to eradicate the tendencies that, if not checked, would lead to much future unhappiness. His uncle is consulted. But Roly will not submit to restriction; he runs away to friends in Ireland. He finds they are very poor, and has to put up with many disagreeable things. He learns to love the unselfish Ulick Burke, who rouses his better nature, and the change is completed by his great affection for his mother. He has an opportunity to show how real is the transformation in his character before the book closes.

In Far Bolivia, a Story of a Strange Wild Land, by Dr. Gordon Stables, R.N., with six illustrations by J. Finnemore, R.I. Dr. Gordon Stables gives us an entertaining story, and at the same time enlarges our knowledge of a country very little known. As he says, vast stretches of Bolivia have never been explored, and we know nothing of the tribes of savages that inhabit them. Of considerable interest is the sketch of social life in Bolivia and La Paz; and that wonderful lake, Lake Titicaca. The plot of the story is simple, but it is worked out energetically. The calm life on the banks of the Amazon is suddenly turned into one of commotion by the carrying off of the heroine by savages, instigated by a scoundrel. Her cousin and his friend organise a rescue party, and absorbing are their adventures before the poor girl is at last liberated.

Arthur's Inheritance, or How He Conquered,

From With Buller in Natal

by Emma Leslie, with three illustrations by Paul Hardy. Arthur Murray had the misfortune to be the son of a worthless, spendthrift father, and he had to go into the world with only himself to depend upon, though there were others who depended upon him. The fight was long and hard, but duty and integrity won at last, and Arthur was free of inherited debt and able to look his fellow-men in the face without fear or shame. The story is one that should be a good influence in the lives of boys.

Held at Ransom, a Story of Colonial Life, by Bessie Marchant, with four illustrations by Sydney Cowell. Kimberley and the discovery of diamonds are the themes of this interesting story. Daniel Webster had been abducted by freebooters, and Judy, his eldest child, was left in charge of her younger brother and sister, and the farm. A ransom was demanded for her father's release, and she fortunately discovered a diamond worth a lot of money in a ravine that was the abode of snakes. The sale of the diamond realised enough to procure the release of her father. But she herself fell into the freebooters' clutches. Her brother was the moving spirit in the rescue of both Judy and her father, and after their heavy trials all came right at the end. The story moves quickly, and deserves to be widely read.

Queen Charlotte's Maidens, by Sarah Tytler, with three illustrations by Paul Hardy. A book by Miss Tytler recommends itself. In this volume she has given us a dainty piece of romance, most picturesque and charming. The White House, an institution founded in the reign of George III. for the benefit of orphan girls whose fathers were of the professional classes, is the scene. Here the girls earn their living by fancy needlework, and their patron and protector is Queen Charlotte herself. Shut out from the world as they are, Charlotte Venn and her sprightly friends find plenty of amusement and happiness in their lives ; and romance and love, laughing at locksmiths, creep in, and the world is a very good world for most of the Queen's Maidens. We have read this book with considerable enjoyment.

Droll Doings, illustrations by Harry B. Neilson, with verses by the Cockiolly Bird. The droll doings are those of dwellers in the region where

> There, on their hind-legs, kittens walk,
> And elephants steal jam.
> There lions sit at tea and talk,
> As gentle as a lamb ;
> There rats at school long copies write,
> While bears are put to bed at night.

The youngsters who get this handsome gift-book at Christmas will be in luck from the very first page, for there the fun commences, and laughable verse and lots of brightly coloured comic pictures carry it on to the end.

Three Fair Maids, or the Burkes of Derrymore, by Katharine Tynan, with twelve illustrations by G. Demain Hammond, R.I. Miss Tynan's books for girls are among the best of their kind, and it is gratifying to note their steadily rising popularity. 'Three Fair Maids' should considerably help in the increasing of its author's audience. A sparkling story, with the west of Ireland as its scene. The three fair maids are the three daughters of a widowed Irish lady who is not as well endowed with this world's goods as she might be. Her husband, Sir Jasper Burke, had married her against his uncle's wish, and had in consequence been disinherited. It is the eldest daughter Elizabeth's idea that they should receive 'paying guests' at Ardeelish, their residence since their father's disinheritance had made the occupancy of Derrymore, a fine old house, impossible. The guests come and adventures follow, and the sound of wedding bells is heard ; the rich uncle turns from his wrath, and Elizabeth becomes his heiress. The three fair maids are fascinating girls ; their story holds the reader to the end. It is illustrated with great taste and skill.

Story-book Time, Pictures and Rhymes for Little Folk. A pretty present for the little people to find near them when they wake up on Christmas Day. With this book of many coloured pictures and amusing verses and stories they will be more than ever convinced that > . . . story-book time, when shadows fall,

> That is the happiest time of all !

The History of Gutta-Percha Willie, the Working Genius, by George Macdonald, LL.D., with eight page illustrations by Arthur Hughes. This new edition, so gracefully pictured by Mr. Hughes, of Dr. Macdonald's admirable story for children is very welcome. The author possesses a genius for writing for children—how hard it is to satisfy them only those who have tried it know—and his delicate, poetic stories are naturally the delight of his youthful but critical readers. 'Gutta-Percha Willie' is one of his best, and we trust that in this new popular form it will have a prosperous career of pleasure-giving.

Kings and Vikings, Stories from Irish History, by W. Lorcan O'Byrne, with six illustrations by Paul Hardy. These stories from the legends of Ireland form a sequel to Mr. O'Byrne's previous volume, 'A Land of Heroes.' There it was Pagan Ireland that was depicted. Here we obtain a glimpse of the period from the introduction of Christianity to its final triumph over paganism. The best translations of the ancient Gaelic manuscripts have been made use of by Mr. O'Byrne, and from these some idea is obtained of the extraordinary richness and poetry of the original sources. The volume is one possessing an interest quite out of the common. To English readers these tales of old Ireland, of her kings, queens, and beautiful maids, and dauntless warriors and bards, have the attraction of an absolutely new thing, and 'Kings and Vikings' should do much to awaken interest in the native literature of Ireland, and so encourage writers like Mr. O'Byrne to give us more from the same bounteous and splendid store.

The Girl's Realm Annual for 1900. This annual is a realm indeed, opulent in riches of a kind that all girls should be grateful for. Its more than twelve hundred pages are ornamented by nearly a thousand illustrations, and it would be a task to count the stories and articles that confront one on opening the volume. The contributors include a host of favourite writers—L. T. Meade, John Strange Winter, Helen M. Burnside, Katherine Tynan, Katherine S. Macquoid, E. Everett-Green, Alice Corkran, Mary E. Mann, Evelyn Sharp, Hannah Lynch, Adeline Sergeant, S. Baring-Gould, and the Bishop of Stepney being among them. Nothing that can interest girls seems to be omitted ; not only their amusement, their dresses and their pleasures are dealt with, but modes of earning a living are brought prominently forward, and their health receives attention. A comprehensive magazine truly.

Messrs. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Twice Captured, a Record of Adventure during the Boer War, by the Earl of Rosslyn, illustrated. Lord Rosslyn's adventures as an author are almost as eventful as those he encountered as a war correspondent. His remarks on the 11th Hussars in the first issue of this work drew such a storm of reproaches upon his head as must have reminded him of the Boers' bullets that showered upon our troops during the war—and he had as little 'cover' as they. In its present form the offending passages have been deleted, and the book may now be trusted to travel unmolested through the perils that surround all things that issue from the press. His experiences in the war were extraordinary. He was present at Pieter's Hill and the relief of Ladysmith. Getting through the Boer lines near Thaba Nchu, he was captured at Dewetsdorp, escaped, was again captured, this time at Reddersburg, into which he drove by mistake, and was fired on by both British and Boer. He was taken to Pretoria, kept in prison for nine weeks, and saw the inside of three jails. All this is pleasantly recounted in his book, which as a record of personal experiences in the war has an interest of a unique kind. Several illustrations, and a copy of a five-pound bank-note reproduced in prison by means of the hectograph, add to the book's attractions. In view of recent controversies the book has a particular interest; but its intrinsic merits will assure it a wide circulation.

THE WAY WE WERE LANDED AT DURBAN! From Twice Captured

The Life and Times of St. Benedict, Patriarch of the Monks of the West, abridged and arranged by O.S.B. from the German of the Very Rev. P. Peter Lechner, Prior of the Benedictine Abbey of Scheyern, in Bavaria. This biography, the author of which died in 1874, appeared as far back as 1857, and is now translated in the pious hope that it may increase the knowledge of a saint who in old times held a place in the heart of most Englishmen. His followers it was who brought over to England the faith that animated him, and founded many splendid Benedictine abbeys. There are many to whom the story of the founder of monastic life in the West will appeal. It will not satisfy the critic who insists upon the correctness of dates, names, and places, and asks for 'authorities'; but as a picture of primitive times, of the days of trusting, unquestioning faith, of a life that through love and humility wrought a good work in the world, it has a deep and abiding charm. The good Prior wrote as a disciple; with all the confidence and simplicity of a child he relates the miracles that the saint, before and after death, performed; he quotes from the 'Revelations of St. Gertrude' the description of St. Benedict in Heaven —'the holy father, blessed by grace and by name, being thus adorned, gave the greatest pleasure to the adorable Trinity and the heavenly court, who rejoiced in him because of his beatitude'—as an historian would quote from a State document. His fervour draws the reader willingly on. A radiance still shines from this great monk Benedict, who from his earliest years abjured the glories of Rome and the world, and dedicated himself to an existence of hardship and poverty and pitiless repression of self, in obedience to his faith and conscience—his 'Rule of Life,' from which all earthly joys are ruthlessly eliminated, still sways the hearts of men, though more than a thousand years have passed away since it was framed.

At the Feet of Jesus, by Madame Cecilia, Religious of St. Andrew's Convent, Streatham. The substance of the papers comprised in this volume was delivered to the members of the League of the Sacred Heart, and it is at their request that the authoress has given her addresses a permanent shape, slightly changed in form and augmented. Her aim is 'to enable the reader to realise how truly our Lord was made like unto us in all except sin, and to present Him as Master and model.' At the end of each chapter is a summary, useful as providing subjects for meditation.

The Life of our Lord written for the Little Ones, by Mother Mary Salome, of the Bar Convent, York. A difficult thing it is to tell the story of the greatest of lives so that little children should understand and be interested. Many have been the attempts. This volume should be much appreciated by members of its author's communion, as it is written simply, devoutly, and, as the imprimatur of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Leeds witnesses, in perfect accord with the teachings of their Church. Every line testifies to the task being a labour of love. The wonderful story is couched in language easy of comprehension to the children, and the book should be popular among those for whom it is intended.

The CHILDREN'S BOOKROOM.

Bubbles, a volume of True Tales and Coloured Pictures, edited by Dr. Barnardo. This is the twelfth volume of this capital annual, and it should be as welcome to children as ever, being crammed with entertaining letterpress and pictures. Its list of contributors, both literary and artistic, is a lengthy and good one, and from its gay frontispiece throughout to its last page it is sweet, wholesome, and elevating.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

Lessons on Israel in Egypt and the Wilderness, by the late Sarah Geraldina Stock, with map. These lessons were written more than twenty-five years ago, and there have, of course, been great accessions to our knowledge on the 'house of bondage' since then. To bring the essays up to the standard of the latest discoveries, they have been revised by the Rev. Thomas Turner and Mr. Thomas Rutt, and notes have been added by Mr. Joseph Pollard. The book should be useful to teachers in Sunday-schools.

The Church Sunday School Magazine, 1900. This stout annual of over six hundred pages is a perfect encyclopædia of information for all connected with Sunday School work. It contains articles on the Church of England Bible-Reading Union, the preparation of the teacher for Sunday School work, expositions of chapters and verses in the Bible, on use of allegory in teaching, how to give a lesson, on a picture, missionary notes, reviews of theological works, and a lengthy list of other papers, besides touching on every aspect of the Sunday School. No teacher—especially one associated with a Church of England Sunday School—should be without it.

The Church Worker, a Magazine for Sunday School Teachers and Church Workers generally, 1900. Those for whose benefit this annual is published should find it of good service in their work. It contains a series of articles on 'Parochial By-ways,' dealing with girls' clubs, mothers' meetings, Bands of Hope, penny banks, &c. Another series, of fifty-two papers, consists of 'Easy Lessons on Israel in Egypt and in the Wilderness.' There are 'Chats on Church Work,' 'Holiday Hints for Church Workers,' papers on 'Profitable Teaching,' the 'Church and the Laity,' 'Results in Christian Work,' and many similar articles, as well as notes on events concerning the Church of England.

Messrs. W. H. & L. COLLINGRIDGE.

The C.I.V. and the War in South Africa, 1900. The City Press illustrated souvenir of the City of London Imperial Volunteers. In four numbers. This record of the creation of the citizen regiment which Lord Roberts praised so highly, and of which London will be ever proud, of its despatch to the front, and of its work there, is a capital idea, capitally worked out. It is invaluable for reference, apart from the stirring story it so well tells. It contains the names of all the officers and men of the C.I.V., with the names of the Volunteer regiments from which they were drafted, full particulars of their equipment, with a minute list of the contents of the kit bags supplied to each man, and a diary of their doings. Then there are portraits of all of them, and many extremely good pictures of them, from the 'swearing in' in London to the battles in which they took part. An eminently readable history of a unique movement and achievement.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Outlines of Military Geography, by T. Miller Maguire, LL.D. Mr. Maguire's able work comes with the high recommendation of Lord Roberts, and thoroughly deserves the praise. The work, as we have already mentioned, is divided into fourteen chapters, dealing with such subjects as the importance of the study of military geography, leading principles of strategy and military geography, command of the sea, the strategic importance of the Mediterranean, the strategic relations of Europe with other continents, frontiers in their relations to military operations, fortifications, principal routes of invasion and main lines of communication, European defiles and roads, historic lines of invasion, and influence of climate on military operations. In the opening chapter a rapid sketch is given of the bearing of geographical studies upon historic campaigns, and we notice that Dr. Maguire pays Captain Mahan a well-deserved compliment. In reference to naval strategy, we are told that 'Captain Mahan, assisted recently by many Britons, has so cleared up' old mysteries and causes of confusion 'that the leading features of naval operations, their objects, and the necessary consequences of defeat under certain conditions ought to be as obvious to every educated man in our isles as the postulates of Euclid.' Of first-rate importance is the chapter on the leading principles of strategy in relation to military geography. Here a difficult and abstruse subject is not only made so clear that anyone of ordinary intelligence may understand it, but it is positively fascinating. The reader follows Dr. Maguire in his study of strategy as one might follow an absorbing game of chess. We find, too, scattered up and down through the work a vast mass of miscellaneous information of the sort in which British readers are at present particularly interested. Thus we learn that at Plevna 200,000 rounds of shell were fired by the Russians and 80,000 by the Turks; that the Russian infantry used 10,000,000 cartridges, and the Turks 15,000,000. During the siege of Strasburg, 'the besiegers fired 193,722 shot and shell on the works and into the town.' At Omdurman one British battery fired 1,000 rounds. Particulars are also given of the ammunition used in the Crimean war, as well as in other big wars. In the same way much information of an interesting and useful character is given about ancient wars, and the historic parallels are often very striking. The two chapters on historic lines of invasion present history in as fascinating a form as it is possible to have it, while the concluding chapter, dealing with the influence of climate on military operations, is full of facts which cannot fail to prove of the greatest practical use. Dr. Maguire ends with the statement that although the vicissitudes of climate are often very trying, they have not produced the least effect on the fighting vigour of our troops; and the following sentences are quoted, with approval, from Sir Rennell Rodd: 'Britain has never failed to find among her sons the men that she has need of. And they will never fail her till she turns her back on empire, and forgets the sea.' The truth of these words has been forcibly illustrated during the last few months. Dr. Maguire has produced a work for which military students will be grateful, and at present we are all military students. This book is well furnished with maps and illustrations, and there is an exhaustive index.

LORD ROBERTS'S MARCH TO CANDAHAR. From Outlines of Military Geography

The Cambridge University Press has brought out for the Christmas season a new pocket edition of the Bible in pearl type, with the references arranged in a central column. This edition is one of the facsimile series, The Cambridge Central Reference Bibles, two editions in ruby and minion type having been already issued. In these editions the chapter headings and the dates have been omitted. We are no longer informed that the date of the creation of the world is B.C. 4004, as in the older Reference Bibles. The references have been re-edited and revised throughout, and in this revision full use has been made of the late Prebendary Scrivener's invaluable work on the references, which was first published in the well-known Cambridge Paragraph Bible. We may particularly call attention to some very neat and serviceable specimens of binding in levant, morocco, yapp, &c.

We have also received from the same Press a specimen of the Cambridge Lectionary Bible, a small 8vo. Bible, arranged in sections, showing the Lessons throughout the year, including the Daily Lessons. This has recently been re-issued on India paper, at prices that put it within the reach of all. The latest Prayer-Book issued by the Cambridge Press is in pica type, about crown 8vo., and may be described as a black type Prayer-Book. The effect of using a very bold black pica type on a crown 8vo. page is most striking. The Communion Service is set in pica type instead of a smaller size, as was usual in many of the older editions. Two editions are published, on white and on India papers. The India paper edition, bound with the 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' makes a compact and attractive volume. It is issued in a variety of bindings.

Messrs. CASSELL & CO., Limited.

Iron Heart, War Chief of the Iroquois, by Edward S. Ellis, illustrated. A story of the American Indians in the time of Washington. Under the redoubtable Iron Heart they 'dig up the hatchet,' and prepare to attack the homesteads of the white settlers. That of the Morris family is burnt down, but the father and mother were fortunately away, and their three boys had been warned by the scout Orris Ouden. After sundry narrow escapes, the boys do fall into the hands of the Indians. The oldest of them, Benny, is a cripple. He knows Iron Heart, who befriends him. Benny reads the Bible to him, and he changes in his feeling for the settlers. A fearful outbreak is imminent; at the last moment, Iron Heart declares for peace and friendship, and Benny has the satisfaction of seeing Indians and settlers living quietly together, and of knowing that he has accomplished a greater work than all the soldiers in the region could have brought about.

The Troubadour, Selections from English Verse, edited by Philip Gibbs. This anthology has lays and lyrics for many moods. But the prevailing mood in the present time is 'Pro Patria,' and our pulses are stirred by the noble clarion-calls of Shakespeare, Tennyson, Campbell, Wolfe, Cowper, and Kipling. Of a part with these is the memory of brave deeds of our forefathers, and 'In Days of Old' we have them sung by such poets as Macaulay, Praed, Michael Drayton, Gray, Southey, Thackeray, and others. Then we have ballads and lyrics by Marlowe, Tennyson, Shelley, Hood, Lamb, Wordsworth, Adelaide Procter, Scott, Longfellow, Keats, Leigh Hunt, and devout pieces by Milton, Wotton, Pope, and other masters. 'Nature's Mirror' is held up to us by Shakespeare;

'Fun and Frolic' follow, and 'Childhood's Hour' is not forgotten, for which Blake and Kingsley and Stevenson wrote some of their tenderest songs. So it will be seen that Mr. Gibbs has produced a treasure house of noble, inspiring, and sweet verse, which is a delight at every page.

Queen Victoria, a Personal Sketch, by Mrs. Oliphant, illustrated. Mrs. Oliphant did not live to complete this sketch of the Queen's personal and family life, but she was able to bring it within sight of the Diamond Jubilee. Thus her work is very much more than a mere fragment. This 'appreciation' is written with Mrs. Oliphant's wonted facility, with the skill of the practised writer; and is, indeed, a work of considerable charm. Only once in the Queen's long reign have the people been unjust in their feeling towards her, Mrs. Oliphant says. That was during the prolonged period of seclusion following the Prince Consort's death; and even in their grumbling over her abstention from public ceremonies they showed how attached they were to her—they complained because they could not see her, and cheer her, and demonstrate their loyalty. Many incidents are related showing the Queen's kindness of heart, her ready sympathy, and her love for the simple ways of life. Most of them have found their way into print before, but they are worth repeating. As a sketch of the personality of the sovereign this book is admirable; it brings into convenient limits a large stock of information, and as a tribute to the character of the Queen, while it is, of course, laudatory, it is also frank and honest. Many portraits and other illustrations elucidate the text. Few books should be more popular with the people than this biography of the Queen.

QUEEN VICTORIA IN 1840. From Queen Victoria

Reminiscences of Oxford, by the Rev. W. Tuckwell, M.A., illustrated. The papers that make up this volume were originally contributed to the Speaker, under the signature of 'Nestor.' In their permanent form they should meet with a wide popularity. The Oxford with which they deal is the Oxford of the thirties and forties, with some memories of a later time; to Oxford men, past and present, the book must appeal with irresistible force. The general reader will find in these chronicles a vastly diverting store of good things; a vivid sketching of phases in the life of the great university that have long since disappeared. The famous names that meet the eye on every page alone give the work an abiding interest: Newman, Pusey, Gladstone, Matthew Arnold, Burne-Jones, Morris, Wilberforce, Acland, Calverley, Manning, Clough, Tennyson, Rossetti—to give only a few at random. Some of the hitherto unrecorded sayings and doings of Pusey are valuable as aids to the knowledge of the famous High Church leader. Pusey as a preacher was not one of the best; but he would throw out some memorable utterances in the way of pithy sentences now and then. 'Find out your strong point, and make the most of it.' 'Seek heaven because it is God's throne, not because it is an escape from hell.' 'It's a good thing to know a large number of minds.' 'Holiness consists not in doing uncommon things, but in doing common things in an uncommon way.' These are some of them that Mr. Tuckwell remembers. The picture of Pusey is not, on the whole, one that devotees will care for. We have not space to mention a tithe of the wise, witty, character-revealing anecdotes of which Mr. Tuckwell gives us so many. They, besides illustrating the people concerned, throw a strong light upon the Oxford of those far-off days. The famous entomologist, J. O. Westwood, held the Natural History chair. He was a brilliant and lovable man, but the letter 'h' was beyond him. 'He once asked Mansel who was St. Bee. Remembering his peculiarity, Mansel answered that he was a near kinsman of St. 'Ives.' 'At an electoral contest between Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Hardy, Westwood, coming in late, hurried and breathless, announced his vote for "Glad——, no, no, I mean 'Ardy."' Henry Smith claimed the vote for Gladstone. "Why," said the Vice-Chancellor, "he only pronounced the first syllable of Mr. Gladstone's name." "Yes, sir; but he did not pronounce the first letter of Mr. Hardy's." Thorold Rogers figures largely, not always to edification, but always humorously. He and Freeman met at dinner. The talk led to political economy. 'Political economy,' said Freeman, 'seems to me to be so much garbage.' 'Garbage is it?' said Rogers; 'the very thing then for a hog like you!' The numerous 'original characters, the stories of brilliant, foolish, lucky, unfortunate men; the bons-mots that set the 'Varsity in a roar; the parodies and the scrapes of the undergraduates; these, and a hundred other things, we must leave, but we hope our readers will obtain the book for themselves; it stands in the front rank of those that deal with Oxford. It contains, also, many portraits to commend it.

From The Jungle School.

The Jungle School, written by S. H. Hamer, illustrated by Harry B. Neilson. The ape, Mr. Jibber-jabber, went forth into the haunts of men, and returned as Dr. Burchall, M.A., determined to introduce civilisation into the jungle. He started a school, charging a hundred nuts per annum for each scholar, and for a time all went well. The fathers and mothers were glad to have someone to look after their children. Dr. Burchell's first step was to put his pupils into clothes, and very funny the young lion, bear, wolf, fox, and elephant look when they are fitted out. The schoolmaster's troubles soon come. He is very ignorant, and canes the children mercilessly. Ultimately he goes too far with Prince Lionel, eldest son of the King of the Jungle, and he disappears for ever, and Lionel wears the appearance of having dined well. And there's an end to civilisation in the jungle. Extremely laughable are the pictures; they and the letterpress together make one of the most humorous books of the season.

Old Fires and Profitable Ghosts, a Book of Stories, by A. T. Quiller-Couch. A singular title 'Q' gives this collection of tales; and nothing that we have read in any of them explains it. But this is a secondary matter; we are thankful for what he has given us, and what's in a title? The stories, he says, are of revenants: persons who either in spirit or in body revisit old scenes, return upon old selves or old emotions, or relate a message from a world beyond perception. One of the stories is itself a revenant: 'Once Aboard the Lugger,' which is the original form of the well-known 'Ia.' The story 'Which?' was suggested by a passage in Hawthorne's note-books, where he proposes a story or sketch the scene of which is 'to be laid within the light of a street lantern; the time, when the lamp is near going out; and the catastrophe to be simultaneous with the last flickering gleam.' Others are founded on fact. All of them have artistic excellence of an exalted kind; they haunt the memory by the magic of their telling; their cunning workmanship will rejoice those who have love for literary finish, for style. He presents the supernatural with admirable talent, and with a discretion that marks the artist. The book should have a prodigious success, if splendid work is held in esteem.

From Peter Piper's Show

Peter Piper's Show, or All the Fun of the Fair, by S. H. Hamer, with illustrations by Lewis Baumer and Harry B. Neilson. A book that will enchant the children—about animals, and full of clever, funny pictures, and pretty verses. The extraordinary adventures of Miss Lettie and her cat Dicker are related at length, and extremely diverting they are. The artists' names are sufficient guarantee that the black-and-white and coloured pictures are of the highest class.

The Girl without Ambition, by Isabel Suart Robson, with eight full-page illustrations by Percy Tarrant. A capital book for girls is this history of Professor Quested and his daughters Cynthia and Kathleen, and others who need not be named. The professor, who is engaged on a great work on Egyptian sculptures, owns a coal mine in Wales and is ruined by his rascal of an agent. Cynthia, a product of Girton, looks down on her sister; but it is the latter, who, when the purse is empty, brings in the money that becomes so sadly needed. We leave our readers to discover the novel way by which Kathleen does this, and how the professor regains his income, and all comes right—they will read it all with avidity. The pictures are really helpful to the text.

Cassell's Magazine, 1900, illustrated. Very varied fare, and plenty of it, is provided by this excellent annual. It is also wonderfully 'up-to-date,' and every class of reader will find abundance of material wherewith to be edified, informed, amused, and so helped to pass dull time away. Serial stories are complemented by short ones; there are articles on famous British regiments, on actors who are artists, motor cars, on underground railways, on cricket, royal wedding presents, and a host of other subjects. Mr. Tighe Hopkins writes a series of curious articles on prison life, entitled 'The Silent Gate'; Mr. Halliwell Sutcliffe, 'Q,' Major Arthur Griffiths, Mr. Levett-Yates, Mrs. L. T. Meade, Mr. Bret Harte, Mr. W. L. Alden, Ouida, Mr. Guy Boothby, Mr. W. Westall, Mr. Neil Wynn Williams, and Mrs. Clement Shorter contribute stories; and lavish and beautiful are the illustrations.

Chums, an Illustrated Paper for Boys, 1900. If the boy could be found to whom this well-proportioned, handsome volume of over 800 pages is not a perpetual delight, the British Museum would be his abiding place. A profusion of stories—well written and exciting—instructive and amusing articles, interviews with famous people, papers on sports, &c., are among the attractions of this first-class annual.

Bo-peep, a Treasury for the Little Ones. The little ones for whom this volume is designed will thoroughly enjoy the rich treat provided for them.

From The Splendid Spur

Beautiful pictures printed in colours are side by side with pretty little stories and verses, and there are plenty of funny things to cause the youngsters to laugh heartily.

The Magazine of Art, 1900, illustrated. The annual volume of the Magazine of Art is a picture gallery of which we can never tire. We wander through it, fascinated by the wealth of the splendid things before us; and we can stray through it again and again; sure of finding something new; receiving fresh enjoyment, some accession to our knowledge; some memory of glorious colour or design, that, revealing a portion of what beauty is, will be a permanent pleasure in the recollection. In its pages—nearly six hundred of them—every phase, branch, and most schools of Art are dealt with in a broad, sympathetic, but discriminating manner. The numerous articles are well written, and all of them are by authors thoroughly competent to write upon the subjects they discuss. Not painting, drawing, and sculpture only, but architecture, bookbinding, furniture, jewellery, metal work, needlework, porcelain, pottery, glass, and wall-papers are within the purview of this most comprehensive magazine. Needless to say, it is filled from end to end with pictures and reproductions. The frontispiece is a fine plate after Mr. Napier Hemy's work, 'Pilchards.' There are thirty-four other full-page plates, of which perhaps the most interesting is that after the picture, 'The Supper at Emmaus,' by the American artist, Gari Melchers. The engravings and sketches in the text are bewildering in number.

Cassell's Saturday Journal, a Magazine of Useful and Entertaining Literature, 1900. Made up of nearly eleven hundred pages of large size, and with type of a size enabling a tremendous amount of letterpress to be crowded into them, Cassell's Saturday Journal contains enough reading-matter to satisfy the most eager peruser of popular literature. Popular the volume is in every sense. The serials are written by Frank Barrett, Gertrude Warden, and Huan Mee—rollicking, robust writers whose style is just suited for a publication like this. There are literally hundreds of interesting articles on all kinds of subjects, interviews with prominent personages, and illustrations by the score.

We are glad to see illustrated editions at a popular price of Q's romances, Dead Man's Rock and The Splendid Spur. Of the first a dozen editions have been sold, and of the latter half as many. Both books have a dash and go which we miss in their author's later works, and make capital reading for boys. The illustrations and get-up will please the most fastidious of youngsters.

The New Penny Magazine, 1900, illustrated. An attractive annual is the New Penny Magazine. It is a merry miscellany of wit and humour, breezy stories, informing articles, sketches, and interviews with celebrated men and women of the day. Dick Donovan contributes a serial, 'Tracked to Doom,' which is as sensational and mysterious as could be wished. The 'Fun and Fancy' columns are really laughter-provoking, which is more than can be said of some 'funny corners' that we know of. A capital magazine is the New Penny Magazine.

Red Jacket, the Last of the Senecas, by E. S. Ellis, with ten full-page plates. Boys should be entranced with this vigorous story. It opens in the time of the American Revolution, when Washington was wresting his country's independence from England. But we have only glimpses of the great struggle; the narrative is concerned with the campaign against the Indians of the Six Nations in 1779. General Sullivan was in command, and he has the assistance of Ted Stiffens, most skilful and adroit of scouts. When Ted comes to close quarters with the enemy, he would have fared badly but for young Jack Ripley, the hero. Jack himself subsequently falls into the hands of Red Jacket, the chief of the Senecas, and death stares him in the face. But he is spared for further adventures, which follow thick and fast. A book more to the liking of healthy boys can hardly be imagined; and from its brisk story they should imbibe knowledge of a period and people of which, generally, they know too little. The illustrations are up to the average.

Little Folks, a Magazine for Young People, 1900, illustrated. Of all the English magazines for the young the popular verdict would undoubtedly be given for Little Folks as at the top of the list. Its annual volume, now before us, will be a sure tonic for the blues in the nursery—assuming they ever penetrate there—no child could resist it. The tone of the magazine is, of course, unexceptionable; but there is none of the intolerable goody-goodiness that makes some publications for children such a penance for them. Cheerful are the stories, the poems, the many little papers and essays, cheerful and handsome the illustrations. 'Little Folks' must be a perpetual joy to its possessors.

The Quiver, 1900, illustrated. As a magazine for the home, the Quiver maintains to the full its reputation as one of the most entertaining, instructive, and elevating of publications. It boasts an imposing array of contributors, among whom are the Archbishop of Armagh, the Rev. Hugh Macmillan, Professor Marcus Dods, the Bishop of Derry, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Katherine Tynan, Agnes Giberne, Sir Frederick Bridge, and Ethel F. Heddle; and Gordon Browne, H. M. Brock, and Chris Hammond are in the list of artists whose work adorns the volume. Serial stories, short stories, papers, and addresses on a variety of interesting and important questions, poems, music, &c., are liberally provided, and all are first class, while there are illustrations galore.

Cassell's Cyclopædia of Mechanics, edited by Paul N. Hasluck, first series. Based on personal experience and expert knowledge, this Cyclopædia contains hundreds of receipts, processes, and memoranda for workshop use, accompanied by twelve hundred illustrations. An index of 8,500 items forms an important feature, as it immensely augments the value of the book, which should find a place in every workshop, and is sure to be of the utmost use to the amateur. Instruction is given on the most diverse subjects—for example, how to make a camera, a theatrical bald wig, a brick arch, or an eight-day clock. There are articles on sewage, dog-collars, boot-finisher's irons, bed-curtain rods, birdcages, and carbonic acid generators; on silver-mounted pipes, wagon wheels, boats, and silk tassels; on the spokes of wheels, and a stand for the baby's cradle; on electricity, and whisky-distilling. There is no end to the information to be obtained from this marvellous Cyclopædia.

From Red Jacket

Animal Land for Little People, by S. H. Hamar, illustrated. The animals and birds we meet in this volume are very communicative. They do not wait for any introduction; at once they start talking about themselves, very instructively, so we soon get to know a lot about them and their ways. There are many photographs of them; therefore if we do not quite grasp what they look like from their descriptions of themselves, the pictures come to our help. Some of these are in colours. The children will like this book immensely.

Messrs. Cassell's annuals for children, Bo-Peep, a Treasury for the Little Ones, and Tiny Tots, a Magazine for Very Little Folks, are very bright miscellanies, sure to please the mites for whom they are published. The pictures are in great number, black-and-white and coloured, the stories and verses and brief articles have a good wholesome tone, and there are heaps of fun in each volume.

Too late for extended notice we have received from Messrs. Cassell the following stories for boys and girls: The Bravest of the Brave, by H. Atteridge; All in a Castle Fair, by Bella Sidney Woolf; Her Wilful Way, by E. Searchfield; Fluffy and Jack, by H. Atteridge; Wrong from the First, by Mrs. Hart; and A Self-willed Family, by E. S. Buchheim. They are all capitally got up and well illustrated, and are admirably adapted for presents and prizes.

From Miss Nonentity

Miss Nonentity, by L. T. Meade, with eight illustrations by W. Rainey. No books for girls surpass those written by Mrs. Meade; none are healthier in tone, informed with truer sentiment, prettier, or more interesting. 'Miss Nonentity' possesses all the qualities that have made its predecessors so popular with girls, and should take high rank in the estimation of those for whom it has been written. 'Miss Nonentity' is little Janet Rodney, who comes loyally to the assistance of her sister Clarissa, upon whom trouble has fallen through her efforts to provide the means that saved her father's life. There was no money to pay the fee of the specialist who could cure her father, and his death seemed inevitable. But Clarissa had just won a scholarship; the money from this could be set aside to pay the specialist. He comes, and the girls' father is restored to them. Then Clarissa finds out that the scholarship money will not be paid direct to her—it will be spent on educating her. How to pay the fee is now her great trouble. She surmounts it, but without 'Miss Nonentity' she would have been unable to do so. A very charming story, told in Mrs. L. T. Meade's best manner.

Seven Maids, by L. T. Meade, with ten illustrations by Percy Tarrant. Prettily illustrated, and bound in covers ornately decorated, this story should prove a nice present for young girls. The rector of Hazlehurst is not a rich man, and his wife takes in a number of girls to educate with their little daughter Marjorie. Marjorie does not like the arrangement, and is jealous of the girls using her beautiful garden and being friends with all her pets. Two of the new-comers are Americans, determined to be friendly with Marjorie. They help her out of a money difficulty and so get her in their power. To extricate herself she steals postal orders belonging to one of them, and then runs away. She is brought back and forgiven, and Julia, from whom she had stolen the money, becomes her best friend.

Venture and Valour, with eight page illustrations by W. Boucher. A volume of exceedingly good short stories, contributed by such masters in their art as Conan Doyle, the late James Payn, G. Manville Fenn, W. W. Jacobs, F. T. Bullen, G. A. Henty, Tom Gallon, and Dr. Gordon Stables, and by other well-known writers. Something of the interest and variety of 'Venture and Valour' may be gauged when we mention that Mr. Henty writes of 'Torpedo Boat 240, a Tale of the Naval Manœuvres'; Mr. Doyle of 'The Surgeon of Gaster Fell'; Mr. Fenn of 'Stringing the Nerves'; Mr. Payn of 'Hunting Extraordinary'; Mr. Jacobs of 'The Madness of Mr. Lister'; Mr. Gallon of 'The Hidden Princess'; Mr. Bullen of 'A Day on the Solander Whaling Ground.' The other stories include 'An Adventure in St. Paul's,' 'The Moorish Treasure,' 'A Chase after a Kidnapper.' Altogether an appetising bill of fare, with which readers will be abundantly satisfied.

The Story of a School Conspiracy, by Andrew

Home, with twelve illustrations by A. Monro. A stirring, good story for boys. The interest commences early. Frank Hornby, walking from the station to school, after the holidays, hears voices in an old ruined cottage, and recognises a schoolfellow, a French boy, who, with his father and two other men, is discussing a plan to steal some jewels. Alfonso's father hates the English. He had lost a law-suit, and through that the jewels which had been deposited in the cellars of an ancient mansion situate on the coast. There is a secret passage to this mansion under the cliffs. Here are all the ingredients for an exciting story, and Mr. Home has not failed to make the most of them. Mr. Monro lends much assistance with his clever pictures.

The Three Witches, by Mrs. Molesworth, illustrated by Lewis Baumer. Mrs. Molesworth has long been the fairy godmother of countless boys and girls, bringing to them in the shape of her books many rare and delectable gifts. 'The Three Witches' is another of her benefactions. Jasper Clavering and his sister Hebe have a weakness for witches, and it is easy for them, when they go to Odenwells, to fix upon the three most peculiar looking people there and persuade themselves that these are witches. Witch No. 1 is a poor ancient woman who sells in the street mats and little fancy things she makes herself; No. 2 is a grand old lady who rules the place and rides about in a big carriage; No. 3 is a beautiful young girl who is poor and lives in an almshouse. They all three wear curious poke-bonnets, and they, as the children find out, are all connected with one another. We will not say more; but all boys and girls will delight in this charming story and Mr. Baumer's very clever drawings.

The Story of a School Conspiracy

Tom's Boy, by the author of 'Laddie,' 'Tip-Cat,' with eight illustrations by Percy Tarrant. Many and manifold are the misfortunes that surrounded Tom Bannister after he married Susie Primrose, the young music-hall singer, who had just made a big success. He was disinherited and took to journalism as a means of livelihood, and did not find it a pathway strewn with gold. Poverty soon had its grip upon them. A son was born to them. Tom took the boy down to see his old home, and arrived at the very time that his father, the old squire, died. Before he died the old man had made a codicil to his will restoring Tom to his rightful place. But while Tom was away, Susie, thinking her husband would be happier without her, ran off. She went to New York, and Tom received a telegram, which she had caused to be sent, that she was dead. Tom follows her; but had to return home without discovering her. Six years passed, and then Susie, unable to keep away any longer, was once more united to her husband and child. But her sufferings had undermined her health, and after six weeks' happiness she died. The tragic story is very well told.

Celia's Conquest, by L. E. Tiddeman, with four illustrations by J. Wilson. When their mother died, their father took Celia and Florizel to France, and there they stayed some time. Then they come back to England, but, after living so long abroad, they do not take kindly to English ways, and Celia detests her school and its mistress, Miss Helsham. The children's artist father is away, and they long to return to France. But the naughty, wilful girl one day overhears a conversation which reveals how good Miss Helsham is to the brother and sister, and how much they owe to her. Their father had not sent any money to Miss Helsham for a long time, and she is advised, being poor herself, to send them to the workhouse. She refuses to do this, however. Then Celia's dislike turns to love; she tries to atone for her misjudgment of her friend. Her father eventually returns and explains what delayed him; which is very interesting reading, that, with the rest of the story, we must leave our readers to enjoy for themselves.

Charge! a Story of Briton and Boer, by G. Manville Fenn, illustrated by W. C. Groome. Not the present Boer war, but the previous one, affords Mr. Fenn his material for a dashing story, which will excite the boys who read it to enthusiasm. A Boer commando rides up to the farm of the Morays, in command of a renegade Irishman, and Val Moray, one of Mr. Moray's two sons, is carried off, the intention being to make him serve against his country. Val is put upon his own horse, his arms are bound tightly, and half a dozen Boers surround him with rifles in their hands. But, hopeless as is his outlook, he plans escape, and soon accomplishes it, owing to the speed of his steed. He rides for hours, still bound. Then a native servant, who throughout is his good angel, helping him out of all sorts of desperate situations, finds him just in time. Together they travel on. They meet a party of horsemen, and are like to be shot, when it is discovered that Val is English. The horsemen are part of the Natal Light Horse, in which his chum Denham is lieutenant. Val joins the troop, the native accompanying. The Boers attack the party, severe fighting takes place, during which Val saves the colonel's life. Later on, Val and Denham fall into the hands of the renegade Irishmen, and are to be shot as spies. Val's father and brother, also commandeered by the Boers, assist them to escape; but it is the native who makes this possible. The book is full of thrills, and is one of Mr. Fenn's best.

Messrs. CHATTO & WINDUS.

The Small-Part Lady, and other Stories, by George R. Sims. Mr. Sims is always amusing when he writes of the stage, and as some of the stories in this collection are about 'the profession,' readers can count with certainty upon entertainment attending the reading of 'The Small-Part Lady.' The first story, that gives its name to the book, is a good specimen of Mr. Sims's methods. In a Gower Street house dwelt an actress with the romantic name of Jones—Miss Katie Jones—to whom the fates had been no kinder than to assign her a small-part in her 'art.' She was, in fact, a dancer, recently promoted to the responsibility of saying 'And I.' Humble though her lot, she was worshipped as a bright particular star by the Gower Street house servant, also rejoicing in being a Jones, who dreams of one day being on the stage herself. Katie has secretly married an Admiral's son—an act which soon brings the Admiral fuming up to London to interview her. The usual comedy follows. He mistakes the servant for his son's wife, and is so horror-struck that the revulsion of feeling, on the truth becoming known, is sufficiently great for him to forgive, but not forget his new daughter. The other tales afford as much interest: the whole volume is a thoroughly George-R.-Simsish one.

Handley Cross, or Mr. Jorrocks's Hunt, by Robert Surtees, with 79 illustrations by John Leech. The novels of Surtees have long taken their place among the classics of the hunting-field, and a recital of their merits would be out of place at this time of day. 'Handley Cross' is usually considered the best of them. This convenient new edition, complete in one volume, with the inimitable Leech's pictures as companions to the racy, rollicking story, should meet with a warm welcome from all lovers of the chase, and what Britisher is not one of them, even if all he can do is to read about it?

London Memories, Social, Historical, and Topographical. By Charles William Heckethorn. Mr Heckethorn's previous books, 'London's Inn Fields and 'London Souvenirs,' demonstrated to admiration that he was a true Londoner and loved the vast city, and therefore possessed the great qualification for writing about it. He has followed up those fascinating volumes by 'London Memories,' which is worthy to take its place by their side. He gossips learnedly, but with no trace of dry-as-dust, of the vicissitudes of London houses and localities, of its ancient religious establishments, of the horrors of old London executions, its plagues, queer street names, old hermitages, extinct and obsolete trades, savage old London; earthquakes, tempests, floods, and fires in London; its wells and springs, and the Thames, and other London subjects. He pieces together into mosaic pictures information garnered from hundreds of books, documents, old and recent newspapers, and other publications, and from his own personal inquiries. There is a rare interest in the book. Mr. Heckethorn brings before us the old life, the old scenes, the pathetic, the humorous, the strange and pretty elements that so abound in the history of the mighty city, in a picturesque way; we read his stories eagerly, and then reflect how pleasantly and skilfully he has managed to convey a wonderful amount and variety of information. No one who loves London should neglect this book.

From The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg

The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg, and other Stories and Sketches, by Mark Twain, with illustrations by Lucius Hitchcock. Mark Twain is seen in this book at his best—almost. We make the qualification, remembering the immortal 'Tom Sawyer' and 'Huckleberry Finn.' What can compare with them? Yet some of the contents of this volume come very near, though in a different way, those delights of our youth. There is no falling off in breeziness, freshness, whimsicality, quaintness, the art of presenting the most absurd things in the most solemn manner, in the power to create hilarity. No one but Mark Twain could have written the tale that gives the title to this work, or 'My First Lie.' Equally characteristic is 'My Début as a Literary Person.' Perhaps the irony of 'Christian Science and the Book of Mrs. Eddy' is too cruel. On the other hand, 'My Boyhood Dreams' is a rich feast of humour. It is a lament on the hard fate that frustrates the ambitions of youth. Mr. Howells had hoped to be an auctioneer, but misfortune after misfortune assailed him; he is now only a novelist and editor. Mr. Hay dreamed of being a steamboat mate; he has sunk lower and lower, until he is nothing but a Secretary of State, Head of Foreign Affairs. Mr. Aldrich aspired to be a horse-doctor; he is merely a poet. Mr. Cable wished to be a ring-master in the circus; he is nothing but a novelist and theologian. There are other examples given. Mark Twain changes the note at the end: 'Oh, our lost youth—God keep its memory green in our hearts! for Age is upon us, with the indignity of its infirmities, and Death beckons!'

The Gentleman's Annual, Christmas 1900, containing a complete novel, The Strange Experiences of Mr. Verschoyle, by T. W. Speight. Mr. Speight is an adept weaver of sensational romance; and the daring flight he essays in this work is 'brought off' very successfully. The theme is not new; but, then, what theme is? Felix Verschoyle is born an unprepossessing specimen of humanity, as far as appearance goes; and after he has been rejected by Ida Daubeny, it is not surprising that he should use the secret entrusted to him by a Brahmin when in India, and 'project' his spirit into a more comely exterior. His original body had been battered to the point of death in the hunting field, and he annexes that of a handsome young fellow, lying asleep. After this, he goes to his own funeral. His new tenement is not altogether satisfactory; it belonged to a professional burglar, and he cannot keep himself from stealing. He tries other bodies; and each has disconcerting disadvantages, and leads him into strange places. He never succeeds in persuading Ida to marry him.

From Philip Winwood

Philip Winwood, a Sketch of the Domestic History of an American Captain in the War of Independence, by Robert Neilson Stephens, illustrated by E. W. D. Hamilton. This story purports to be written by Winwood's friend, 'his enemy in war,' Herbert Russell, Lieutenant in the Loyalist forces. The manner is of one steeped in the literature and history of the time of the great struggle for America's freedom; and the book reads actually as the record of one who lived during the period described. It is an achievement of high quality, and ranks Mr. Stephens as a writer of historical romance much above the average. We remember his previous works, but 'Philip Winwood' is of superior metal to any of them. The New York of the era before the outbreak, and the life of the Faringfield family, one of the chief merchant families of the place, are pictured for us with rare skill and truth of colouring. The war dispels the calm and quiet happiness that had, save for the excesses of Ned Faringfield, prevailed in the house of the rich merchant. Philip, the forlorn orphan, adopted years previously by Mr. Faringfield, joins the American forces, the cause his benefactor espoused, while the second son Tom, and the daughters, remain on the side of the king. Among the daughters is Madge, whom Philip had married not long before. Poor Madge, headstrong, wilful, longing for the pleasures her narrow life had debarred her from, drifts from her husband; she plots with his foes, fascinated by the smooth-tongued Captain Falconer, and in a well-conceived and well-executed scene she is within an ace of bringing Philip to a shameful death as a spy. Thrust out of her father's home for her treachery, she sails for England with her worthless brother Ned. Tom is killed in a duel by Falconer. After the war, Winwood also goes to England. At this point we must leave the story. Our readers must get the book for themselves; they will thank us for bringing it to their notice. Winwood is an especially fine character; we shall long remember him.

The Pretty Polly, a Voyage of Incident, by W. Clark Russell, with twelve illustrations by G. E. Robertson. Mr. Clark Russell's purpose in writing this book seems to have been the ventilation of his views on the mercantile service, on the future of men-of-war, and the manning of our ships by foreigners. These and cognate questions come up pretty frequently in the course of the narrative. The 'Pretty Polly' is a brig, which has been sent out on a voyage to Calcutta, under the command of Captain Bolt. She is owned by the fathers of four young fellows who had a liking for the sea, and wanted to find out what a sailor's existence was like before deciding on their careers in life. One of them had some trouble with his eyes, and a voyage had been recommended for their benefit. The trip of the sailing ship does not lead to deserted isles, pirates, untold gold, and things of that sort; but the lads learn seamanship, and there is a wedding on board of two poor creatures picked up after a wreck, a fire, a couple of fights, and finally a collision, which sends the 'Pretty Polly' to the bottom. It is almost needless to say that the book is well worth reading, it has the indefinable attractiveness that is part of everything its author writes.

Messrs. T. & T. CLARK.

Buddha and Buddhism, by Arthur Lillie, M.A. 'The World's Epoch-Makers' series. Mr. Lillie's work is an important contribution to the excellent series of which it forms part. Within its compass this handbook gives the reader probably the best account of Buddha and Buddhism that has yet been written. The subject is a difficult one to deal with in a volume of a little over two hundred pages, but Mr. Lillie has surmounted the obstacles in his way admirably. Buddha's life and teaching, with its development, and the rites of Buddhism are succinctly sketched. One of the most interesting chapters is that on the points of contact between the Buddhist and Christian Scriptures.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

With Note-Book and Camera, a Winter Journey in Foreign Lands, by Edith M. E. Baring-Gould, with preface by Sir W. Mackworth Young, K.C.S.I., Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab. A record of personal experiences of Mission work in Egypt, North India, and Ceylon and of a journey in Italy. The lives and the work of the missionaries, with the success or otherwise attending their great work, are described; the public buildings, schools, churches, &c., are also delineated; and the many photographs help us to realise the interesting scenes the author visited. The pictures are interesting and instructive.

Messrs. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

Travels in the East of Nicholas II., Emperor of Russia, when Cesarewitch, 1890-1891. Written by order of His Imperial Majesty by Prince E. Ookhtomsky. Volume II. As regards its appearance, this, the second and concluding volume of Prince Ookhtomsky's work, which is translated by Mr. Robert Goodlet, and edited by Sir George Birdwood, is, with its predecessor, the most splendid and gorgeous publication issued from the press for many years. The broad gilt-edged pages have glorious margins, the type used is large and clear, the paper elegant and stout, the binding a thing of joy. Then the illustrations! There are dozens of magnificent full-page wood engravings, an equal profusion in the text, all capped by the steel and heliogravure plates. Truly beautiful are all these. They depict India as, probably, she has never been depicted before. Excellent in their art, almost all India's life is within their purview, and they are faultlessly reproduced.

The princely author's narrative moves slowly, quietly along amid this plethora of adornment. He discusses the history of India; works out an idea of similarity between Russia and India, which is far-fetched and eccentric; describes the occupations of the natives, the public works, and historic buildings and temples; dilates upon the religions of the various races; and does not devote too much space to the hospitality extended to the Cesarewitch by the British Government. He has no love for England. India, he says, 'lies crushed and dumb under the burden of her exotic mushroom universities and expensive administrative and social reforms, carried out with all the blind energy of self-sufficient ignorance.' 'What irony,' he adds, 'lurks in such cheap catch-words as "native congresses," a "free native press," and, finally, "the right of natives to be citizens of a great colonial empire!"' But the book is worth reading and pondering, as the expression of an influential Russian's thoughts on the Indian problem and the great work we believe we have done for civilisation in India.

Messrs. Constable have done all book-lovers a service in bringing out daintily produced pocket editions of Mr. Meredith's Selected Poems, The Story of Bhanavar the Beautiful, and The Tale of Chloe. His admirers will be especially glad to have the poems, which are a delight to all such as relish thought packed in verse. Even Browning's verse is not more pregnant than Mr. Meredith's—and he seems to us at his best to have a melody which Browning never or very rarely reaches. What, for example, could be better than this?

> Mother of the dews, dark eye-lashed twilight,
> Low-lidded twilight, o'er the valley's brim,
> Rounding on thy breast sings the dew-delighted skylark,
> Clear as though the dewdrops had their voice in him,
> Hidden where the rose-flush drinks the rayless planet,
> Fountain-full he pours the spraying fountain-showers.
> Let me hear her laughter, I would have her ever
> Cool as dew in twilight, the lark above the flowers.

The Story of Chloe' is one of the most brilliant of the many brilliant things Mr. Meredith has written, and in this pretty form is a fresh delight to read. 'The Story of Bhanavar the Beautiful' shows its author in an unfamiliar light, and has, therefore, something of the charm of novelty as well as of inherent beauty. No admirer of our greatest novelist should be without these three pretty volumes.

Tales from Tennyson, by the Rev. G. C. Allen, M.A., Head-master of Cranleigh School. Mr. Allen's object in these 'Tales' is to put within the reach of younger readers the substance of the cycle of Arthurian romance which is contained in Tennyson's 'Idylls of the King.' He preserves as far as possible the letter and spirit of the late laureate's work, and some echoes of the ancient chronicles that form the basis of each story. A very readable book is the result, which should induce to the reading of the 'Idylls' themselves and create interest in the shadowy king whose name, nevertheless, is found in almost every part of the country. An informing introduction and useful notes add to the serviceableness of Mr. Allen's work. As frontispiece there is a fine photograph of Mr. Watts's 'Sir Galahad.'

The Princess's Story Book, edited, with an introduction, by George Lawrence Gomme, F.S.A., illustrated by Helen Stratton. These historical stories, collected out of English romantic literature in illustration of the reigns of English monarchs from the Conquest to Queen Victoria,' from the fourth and last of the series of tales from our historical romances for which we are indebted to Mr. Gomme. The idea was excellent, and Mr. Gomme has realised it to excellent purpose. The present volume is as good as any of the preceding ones, and is in every way a desirable book to put into the hands of the young. There are stories from Scott, Froissart, Kingsley, Lytton, Mary Shelley, Fenimore Cooper, Samuel Lover, Harrison Ainsworth, Jane Porter, and Lord Beaconsfield, and a magnificent collection of stirring, healthy stories they are. We trust their readers will, after reading them, turn to the books from which they are taken. Miss Stratton's illustrations deserve much praise; they are well and gracefully done. The volume is one that for amusement and instruction, stands among the best for children that have been published this season.

Where Black Rules White, a Journey across and about Hayti, by Hesketh Prichard, illustrated. Mr. Prichard's book is an indictment of the black man as ruler, and his verdict is that the Republic of Hayti is a failure. He discusses the customs, the religion, of the people, the position of the priests, the attitude of the blacks to the white population, the Haytian Press, Haytian statesmen, and military leaders, and conveys his impressions with directness and extreme candour. He has no opinion of the black—he, the black, is incapable of treading the road that leads to progress and civilisation. Corruption, tyranny, ineptitude, improbity—these are the fruits, the results, after a hundred years, of negro rule in Hayti. It is a strong indictment; but the evidence adduced by Mr. Prichard is also strong. His book should be carefully read; it touches on a problem of which we are likely to hear more in the future unless present methods are speedily abandoned.

Messrs. CORNISH BROTHERS.

The Old Woman and her Pig and The Three Wishes, by the author of 'The Peacock at Home.' These little quaint volumes, containing old stories in a new dress, are attractive in their way, with their French-grey coloured bindings, and their odd woodcuts, of the style of the books our great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers used to be regaled with. There is no mistake about their moral. In 'The Three Wishes,' for example, we are taught to > Temper our hopes with moderation,

> And suit our wishes to our station.

Which reminds us of the sentiment conveyed in the lines:

> God bless the Squire and his relations,
> And keep us in our proper stations.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Leap Frog, a Story of, and for, Boys, by M. Martin, with four illustrations. This is the story of the Young Crusaders' Union, a temperance society formed by boys and girls, who work energetically to put down the demon of drink in their northern manufacturing town, and carry on their useful mission when they grow up. A well-told little story.

Units in a Crowd, by M. M. Lathom Browne. A good specimen of the average temperance story. The little heroine, Nellie, works to help her mother, who is an invalid, and she loses her life through an accident caused by the drunkenness of her reprobate father. From this fatality dates the drunkard's reformation. There are several pictures in the book.

The Squires of Karrondale, or Robert Clarkson's Promise, by Frances Billinge Evans. A story of a drunken squire and his son, who promises never to touch intoxicants, and of Hector St. Clair, a weak-willed artist, constantly signing the pledge and as constantly breaking it. He breaks the heart of his beautiful young wife. All, however, is not sadness in this story with a purpose; there are plenty of bright people moving through its pages, which are nicely illustrated.

Messrs. J. M. DENT & CO.

The Scottish Chiefs, by Miss Jane Porter, with illustrations by T. H. Robinson. How many young people have heard of Jane Porter, or have read her 'Scottish Chiefs'? Very few, probably, on this side of the Tweed. Yet her romance had once great vogue, and gave its author considerable fame. It is superior to most of the historical novels that have won unbounded popularity within recent years. It is a noble story, told with skill and genuine feeling, and it deserves to be read and honourably remembered. This old favourite may become a new favourite, if a superb edition of it can do anything to that end. Certainly, 'The Scottish Chiefs' never appeared in more august form than that in which Messrs. Dent now send it forth. Paper, print, and binding are all excellent. There is a splendid frontispiece in colours, surrounded by an artistic border; the title-page is a joy to the eye, and there are dozens of black-and-white illustrations, full-page and in the text. All of these are of a high order of merit, and combine to render this the finest edition of 'The Scottish Chiefs' yet published.

A Hunter's Log in Russia, by Fred. Whishaw. Mr. Whishaw forsakes, for a time, the paths of the writer of romances, and gives us instead a glimpse of Russia that is rarely afforded us—a happy, smiling Russia, upon which the shadow of the secret police is not. He goes a hunting in the north of Russia, amid the huge tracts of pine forest and moorland, where freedom lingers, and Siberia has no terrors. The volume in which he recounts his adventures is a right pleasant, gossipy book, redolent of the open air and the sunshine. It is not taken up entirely with stories of hunting, but contains much nature lore, and several dissertations upon the life of the Russian people. Those who know Russia only from the pages of the political novel should procure this genial 'Hunter's Log'—it will yield them agreeable memories.

Constantinople, the Story of the old Capital of the Empire, by William Holden Hutton, illustrated by Sydney Cooper. ('Mediæval Towns' Series.) Constantinople, 'daughter of Imperial Rome, Empress of the mystic East'—how many readers know anything of her great history? A strange, eventful, blood-stained story it is, full of romance and impressiveness. Mr. Hutton, to whom no city in the world is so fascinating as the ancient home of the Cæsars of the East, was, therefore, just the man to write this sketch of its history, and worthily has he done his work. It is not a guide, but no visitor to Constantinople should traverse its streets or inspect its churches and other buildings without this notable little book. It is the ideal of what such a book should be. The illustrations are in themselves a delight. In appearance the volume is worthy of Messrs. Dent's reputation for taste, and that, as we all know, is a very high one.

In a form which will please all book-lovers Messrs. Dent have brought out 'Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. The Roman Emperor, his meditations concerning Himselfe: treating of a naturall man's happinesse; wherein it consisteth, and of the meanes to attaine unto it. Translated out of the Originall Greeke: with notes; by Meric Casaubon, B. of D., and Prebendarie of Christ Church, Canterbury.' That is a great deal to put on a title-page, but Messrs. Dent, or their printers, have arranged it with so much taste and skill that the page does not seem heavy or over-crowded. The get-up of the volume is such as we have learned to expect from the publishers. The paper is good, the type clear, and the binding attractive, while several excellent illustrations add to the attractiveness of the book. Finally, Mr. W. H. D. Rouse contributes a scholarly and useful introduction. Of the intrinsic quality of the work we need not speak. Among a host of others, Renan and Arnold have praised it: and what Renan and Arnold praise is at least of uncommon merit.

In a similar attractive form Messrs. Dent have produced Bacon's Essays, edited by Mr. Walter Worrall, with an introduction by Mr. Oliphant Smeaton. In appearance the book is such as might be expected from Messrs. Dent, when a real call is made on their taste, and the introduction, if not brilliant, is sensible and to the point. The volume is furnished with several portraits, a glossary, and an index of quotations.

The True Annals of Fairy-Land, the Reign of King Herla, edited by William Canton, illustrated by Charles Robinson. Surely, of all the volumes published for children this season this is the most delightful. In appearance it is among the choicest that Messrs. Dent have issued.

Its covers are of blue and gold; its frontispiece and title-page printed in colours, with attractive borders; and it is lavishly garnished with full-page designs by Mr. Robinson, full of dainty grace and artistic skill. Of the stories themselves it is perhaps sufficient to know that Mr. Canton is responsible for them. King Herla marries the daughter of the King of the Francs, and high revelry is held. The king had previously met the king of the dwarfs, who had promised to take him in a year's time to Fairy Land. The feasts at King Herla's palace are all provided by the dwarfs; and, at the end of each, stories are told by the courtiers, the ambassadors from far-away countries, and others. Among them are many old favourites, retold in Mr. Canton's inimitable style. Thus once again we read of 'Cinderella,' 'Briar Rose,' 'The Dead Mother,' 'The Golden Fleece,' 'The Emperor's New Clothes,' 'King Lear,' 'The Elves,' the 'Love of the Dryad,' the 'Children of Lir,' and many others. In time King Herla has a son born to him, and there are fresh rejoicings. Afterwards the king sets out for the dwarfs' kingdom, and many strange and beautiful things he sees. His wife and son he never sees again. Why, our readers must discover for themselves. In making the discovery, we vouch our critical word they will not be disappointed. No living writer better understands child nature than Mr. Canton, and in this enchanting book, which makes us young once more, he makes us grateful to the so-potent art that renders such a miracle so easy of accomplishment. One of the most difficult things in literature is to write or compile a book for real children, children as yet unsophisticated by the ways of the world; but that hard task Mr. Canton has performed with charming success.

Messrs. Dean issue a series of cardboard toys, which are bound to commend themselves to the boys. 'Soldiers of the Queen,' No. 2, Infantry, is a set representing a company of Scots Guards: a major, a captain, two lieutenants, five sergeants, and fifty-six privates. A sergeant's and a private's forage caps go with these heroes; in fact, the caps are so fitted that they can be used as a box to contain the troops. Give these caps to any boys of spirit, and they'll at once fancy themselves 'Soldiers of the Queen.'

The Diverting History of John Gilpin, by William Cowper. Pictures by A. S. Forrest. This edition for children should make Cowper's famous poem known to all the youngsters in the land. The type is large and clear, while the spirit of the poem is reflected in Mr. Forrest's illustrations—some of which are coloured and others in black-and-white — with admirable truth, and humour that provokes peals of laughter.

Ten Little Boer Boys, a New Version of an Old Tale, by 'Norman.' Pictured by A. S. Forrest. This volume should be an immense favourite with children. 'Norman's' words, of which this verse is a specimen, > Nine little Boer boys,

> With tactics up-to-date;
> One tripped on barbed wire,
> And then there were eight—are set to music; and, best of all, they are illustrated with all Mr. Forrest's well-known humour and fancy. The coloured pictures are, indeed, masterpieces in comicality.

Messrs. Dean's publications for children are always of a high order of merit, and the numerous volumes suitable for presents that they issue this year are creditable to them in every way. In their 'Panorama' series they issue Musical Nursery Rhymes, music by R. M. Harvey; and Struwwelpeter of To-day. These gaily dressed books, brimming over with handsome and funny coloured pictures, should afford unbounded delight in the nursery. They are so bound that they can be stretched out several feet, and the whole of the pictures displayed at a glance. Country and Seaside, illustrated by E. Capper and A. G. Clifford, untearably bound, is another welcome addition to the library for small children. It is full of simple little stories and verses, amply illustrated in colours and by black-and-white drawings. Added to Dean's 'Diploma' series are Pick-a-Back, A stands for Ass, and King o' the Castle, and The Patriotic Painting Book. Dean's 'Gold Medal' series of picture books now includes Bow-wow, Rock-a-bye Baby, and Little Boy Blue, illustrated by M. D. Ayoub. These are excellently adapted for the little ones. In Dean's 'Prize' series we now have Off to the Front, stories and verses by M. Hamilton, M. Farloe, &c., pictures by M. Wesaup, Frank M. Barton, &c., and The Little New Zealander, stories and verses by Lizzie Grabham, Mary Hamilton, &c., pictures by F. Holms and others. The 'Front' in the first of these is somewhere in the nursery, and a fierce battle takes place there. Both books are crammed with pictures and stories such as please children. The type is large. Tommy and Johnny, illustrated by A. S. Forrest, Richard Simkin, and C. L. Pott. The first part of this book contains some very humorous pictures and letterpress descriptive of military life; the second is occupied by the 'diverting history' of Johnny Gilpin. The illustrations, both coloured and black-and-white, are first class. The book is in an untearable binding. We cordially commend all these publications of Messrs. Dean's; they are sure to shower delight and laughter upon the little ones for whom they are intended.

Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.

The Vereker Family, by May Crommelin, with a frontispiece. A collection of stories of which love is the theme. The longest is that from which the volume takes its name, and from which we learn that the Vereker family includes five girls, of whom the eldest is Virginia. There are not many suitors for her hand, though she is a beautiful girl, and it seems probable that she must content herself with the poor little parson of the place. A friend of the family, Jim Moxon, is deputed to persuade her to accept the parson, and she conveys the hint that she would prefer marrying Jim, who has always loved her. So they are engaged. Then one fine day the parson's brother comes along. He is a lord, handsome and rich. It is a case of love at first sight, and Jim offers to retire. Virginia is loyal to him, however; but the lord marries her after all, for Jim is killed in saving his lordship's life. The other stories are as well written as the first, and the book provides very pretty reading.

In previous years it was our pleasant duty to draw attention to the excellence and beauty of the Diaries published by Messrs. De La Rue, and the praise then bestowed may in general be taken as repeated regarding the new issues for 1901. There is considerable difficulty in getting or maintaining variety in diaries, and we have perhaps seen more elaborate and attractive diaries bearing Messrs. De La Rue's imprint than any in this year's parcel. But the small and pocket diaries are still pretty and are edited with the usual care by Mr. Edward Roberts. The information given is wonderfully varied and full. Besides the ordinary calendar or almanac information we have a perpetual calendar, planetary notices for the coming year, a table of meteorological averages, postal and stamp duty notes, tables of weights and measures, and so forth. The 'Finger' and 'Thumb' Diaries go so naturally into the vest pocket, we imagine the public would now be unable to do without them. It should be added that in all cases the paper is of the best.

My Little Mummers, Christmas Plays for other Children, by G. Meinertzhagen. At Christmas time the minds of people lightly turn to thoughts of charades, and even the children develop histrionic yearnings. Here is a volume that should cause their young hearts to swell with pride, for it contains five plays written to be acted entirely by them. Mrs. Meinertzhagen says these pieces have been rendered by her own children for years; and from her experience she is able to give, in her preface, many useful hints and instructions. The plays include: 'The Babes in the Wood,' 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' 'Cinderella,' and 'The Magic Ring,' simply written, with ample stage directions. So here is the opportunity for budding Ellen Terrys and Irvings

Messrs. DUCKWORTH & CO.

Wyemarke and the Mountain-Fairies, by Edward H. Cooper, illustrated by 'Wyemarke' and G. P. Jacomb-Hood. Last year Wyemarke and Marjorie went to Paramé for the summer, and made friends with the sea fairies there, Mr. Cooper telling us all about the matter in a very charming book. This year the little girls went to Zermatt, and it was not long before they got on intimate terms with the mountain-fairies. Wyemarke herself undertakes to recount her and her cousin's adventures, some of which she illustrates in a remarkable manner. They went to a ball given to all the mountains by the Queen of the Mountain Fairies, at which, of course, Mont Blanc was present, and very dignified and regal he looked. They fly from Switzerland to London and back again; they prevent, with the fairies' aid, a duel between the ferocious head-waiter and the terrible chef, and do a lot of other clever things besides. An enchanting story, which has the fault of being not long enough. The children will go into raptures over it.

Mr. HENRY FROWDE.

Of the Imitation of Christ, by Thomas à Kempis. The never-ending flow of editions of the 'Imitation' is reinforced by a new translation issued by Mr. Frowde from the Oxford University Press. Produced in various bindings, in large type, this edition should be very acceptable. The text is revised, and possesses the virtue of absolute faithfulness to the original Latin of its author. No word or phrase has been altered in the interests of any school or party. The verse arrangement—for which there was no authority, and which dated only from the seventeenth century—has been abandoned, and the work appears in paragraphs, according to the MS. of Thomas à Kempis, as distinguished in Hirsche's edition. Quotations from Scripture are printed in italics, and there are full indexes of these, of quotations from other sources, and of subjects dealt with. This edition, therefore, is the most satisfactory we have yet had in English. Uniform with it, and issued by the same publisher, is a new edition of The Christian Year, which can be had in several forms.

Selected Poems, Old and New, by Annie Matheson, with portrait, and preface by C. H. Herford. In this special issue, designed for Christmas use, of Miss Matheson's poems is included a 'Christmas Carol,' one of the most beautiful poems she ever wrote. These poems — songs, sonnets, hymns—deserve a wide circulation, for there breathes in them a noble catholicity—'that which reads everywhere the symbols of Divine love, and instead of casting away the seed because it is not the leaf, or the leaf because it is not the flower, or the flower because it is not the fruit, reveres in each imperfect form the fulness it foreshadows.' There is in them a deep reverence for humanity, a tender sympathy with toil. The spirit of these poems is that of the sonnet on London :

> I love her, less for her imperial state,
> Her lovely dome, her river with its ships,
> Than for the spark of God within the brute,
> The human soul not yet regenerate.

Messrs. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.

The Goblin, a novel, by Catherine and Florence Foster. This volume errs on the side of undue length ; there are over four hundred pages, and the events are comparatively few and far between. The 'goblin' is Archie Luttrell, who is a fine little chap, with a propensity for asking awkward questions. The story is concerned with Archie, his brother Willie, and their friend Lord Calliard, and the love that subsists between Archie and Ruth Woodhouse. Though she loves him, she marries Lord Calliard. How this happens the authors tell us pleasantly, but, as we say, in a somewhat long-drawn manner.

Chatterbox, 1900, edited by J. Erskine Clarke, M.A. ; The Prize for Girls and Boys. These annuals will bear comparison with any of their long line of predecessors for attractiveness and freshness ; it is remarkable how their interest is kept up. Little ones are as varied in their likings and dislikings as older folk ; and so in these volumes all tastes are catered for, and with wonderful success. Of course, they are illustrated — there are scores of pictures, which are as good as the letterpress.

Sunday Readings for the Young, 1901, illustrated. How fortunate children are in these days, with so many choice magazines devoted entirely to pleasing them ! Here is another in the long list of rivals for the favour of the small ones ; and as pretty and fine in appearance as the best of them. Sunday contains five serial stories—one of them, 'With Wellington to Waterloo,' by that capital writer for boys, Harold Avery ; any number of well-told short stories, sketches, interesting papers, poems, acrostics, &c. ; and all these are set off by dozens of pictures excellently reproduced.

The Book of King Arthur and his Noble Knights, Stories from Sir Thomas Malory's 'Morte Darthur,' by Mary Macleod, introduction by John W. Hales, illustrations from drawings by A. G. Walker. The perennial popularity of Malory's 'Morte Darthur' is a matter to heartily rejoice over, for what nobler, more delightful book is there in the language ? The young should be made acquainted with it at an early age ; they cannot hear too soon of King Arthur. In this volume of selected and simplified stories from Malory we have just the version to put into their hands. The style is well adapted for them, and we have the gems of Malory put into a form that will attract them at once. The pictures that illustrate the splendid romance are very artistic ; the pages are large, the type bold, and the binding pretty. Mr. Hales's introduction deals with Malory's life, so far as the facts are known, and his conclusions as to his ancestry and position seem well founded.

My Week-Day Story Book, illustrated. Another excellent miscellany of clever and pretty stories, articles, verses, and illustrations for the children. Really there is no end to the good things provided for them.

Friendly Leaves for 1900, edited by Christabel Coleridge, illustrated. Besides articles by the accomplished editor, this annual contains contributions by Charlotte Yonge, M. Bramston, A. C. Shipman, M. Palgrave, D. Hammonde, Canon Keymer, &c. The work of the Girls' Friendly Society finds record here; and girls of all classes will find much instruction and recreation in the pages of Friendly Leaves.

From "Under the Rebel's Reign"

Chatterbox Christmas-Box, a Christmas Number, illustrated by A Nobody, is an entertaining production. Boys and girls will be equally gratified with it; it contains several splendid stories, poems, &c., and the illustrations are of a highly diverting kind.

The Young Standard Bearer, 1900, illustrated. A serial story, chats on animals, birds, fishes, and insects, a goodly number of other papers on interesting subjects, recitations, dialogues, and poetry, with plenty of pictures, make this an acceptable annual for the young.

Mothers in Council, edited by Charlotte M. Yonge, Vol. X. This annual is the organ of the Mothers' Union, the objects of which are to uphold the sanctity of marriage, to awaken in mothers of all classes a sense of their great responsibility in the training of their children, and to organise in every place a band of mothers who will unite in prayer, and seek by their example to lead their families in purity and holiness of life. The papers and addresses it contains are therefore all directed to these ends, and should be helpful to all engaged in the Union's work.

Under the Rebel's Reign, a Story of Egyptian Revolt, by Charles Neufeld, illustrated by Charles Sheldon. The author of 'A Prisoner of the Khaleefa' has produced a good story, which, though a work of imagination, is founded upon his own remarkable experiences. The hero, George Helmar, a young German, leaves his university after a duel with a bullying fellow-student, and, after sundry adventures on the Danube and in Constantinople, arrives at Alexandria just as Arabi's rebellion breaks out. He becomes an interpreter to the British forces, is taken prisoner whilst out on patrol, escapes, is again taken and again escapes, and reaches Tel-el-Kebir with important news which prevents Cairo from being destroyed. All the numerous incidents are vividly described, and the book is altogether a first-rate story. The illustrations are particularly good.

Richard Elwyn, Master of Charterhouse, 1885–1897, a brief record of his life, by the Rev. R. Patterson, M.A., Vicar of Littlebourne, with portrait. This biography appeals primarily, of course, to past and present Carthusians, and they will appreciate this memento of one who was a pupil, usher, headmaster, and finally master of the famous school of Steele, Wesley, John Leech, and Thackeray. The biography of Canon Elwyn has an interest, too, for a wider circle; he was a brilliant scholar, a man of infinite personal attractiveness, and this brief memoir gives us some insight into the character of one whose influence was

The White Stone, the Story of a Boy from the Bush, by Herbert C. MacIlwaine, illustrated by G. D. Rowlandson. Mr. MacIlwaine, whose previous novels of Australian life have been so favourably received, provides us, in 'The White Stone,' with a book for boys that is unflagging in its interest. Jack Darvall, after various fits of gold fever, is persuaded by his wife to confine his attention to cattle. Their boy Rowley is sent to England to school, where he has rather a rough time, but manages to give a good account of himself, and literally to make his mark on some of his schoolfellows. Rowley had with him the 'white stone,' found in Australia, which is to him a kind of fetish. One day it falls and is broken, and in it are seen tiny seams of gold. The secret is first discovered by a companion of Rowley's, whose father, named Tyler, lives near the Darvalls in Australia. No time is lost; the ground on which the stone was found is registered, and the Tylers make a fortune. Jack Darvall goes mad at having lost his opportunity, and haunts perpetually a tunnel he has made, where he suspects there is more gold. There is; and an exciting race follows for its registration. Rowley outrides Tyler, and the gold is his. We have read this story with absorbed attention. The numerous illustrations are first-class.

Letters of Spiritual Counsel, by the Rev. J. P. F. Davidson, M.A., with portrait, and short memoir by Arthur F. Davidson, M.A. Mr. Davidson was the well-known High Church clergyman who was for a time vicar of St. Matthias, Earl's Court. He died in 1899. He had much to do with the development of 'Retreats,' the founding of penitentiary establishments for 'sisters'; advocated the confessional, and practised what he preached; and was a man of a saintly type, oddly at variance, it would seem, with the age in which he lived as regards his ideas and habits of mind. These 'Letters' were written to members of his congregation — to his 'spiritual children,' to whom he was their 'Director'; and they touch upon many points of the religious life. It appears from these epistles that the majority of, if not all, these people who consulted him were women. The volume will, no doubt, be treasured by the congregation and the friends for whom he laboured so strenuously. To the general public it has an interest as a picture of the High Church priest, who never refers to the Church of England as Protestant, and whose details of church services and work might have come from the pen of a Roman Catholic clergyman describing his own occupations.

Mr. L. UPCOTT GILL.

A History of Hand-made Lace, by Mrs. F. Nevill Jackson, with supplementary information by Ernesto Jesurum, illustrated. This elegantly got-up work deals with the origin of lace, the growth of the great lace centres, the mode of manufacture, methods of distinguishing, and the care of various kinds of lace. It seems to include all that could be told about hand-made lace, past and present, and the subject is treated in a most interesting manner. Many anecdotes brighten the narrative; there is a chapter on the literature of lace, a dictionary of lace, and a glossary. There are also the music and words of an old song sung by the lace-makers of Venice. The illustrations consist of nineteen plates, and over two hundred engravings of lace, and the fashion of wearing it as shown in contemporary portraits. This means the reproduction of many historical portraits, which enhance the interest of the work. We do not know of any book on the subject that is equal to it.

SPECIMEN OF HAND-MADE LACE. From A History of Hand-made Lace.

The '1900' Supplement to 'The Dictionary of Gardening,' by George Nicholson, F.L.S., and other specialists. The professional gardener, as well as the amateur and the lover of flowers, will greet this substantial work with enthusiasm. Mr. Nicholson's 'Dictionary,' issued for the first time twenty years ago, amply fulfilled its purpose, as all growers know; but since then great changes have been brought about—there are new plants, new names, and extended knowledge. Therefore, to supply the deficiencies wrought by time in the 'Dictionary,' this 'supplement' is published, bringing the information available up to date. The explanations are concise and clear; the illustrations, of which there are scores, many of them photographs, remarkable for their fidelity.

Messrs. GALL & INGLIS.

At the 'Sign of the Golden Fleece,' a Story of Reformation Days, by Emma Leslie, illustrated. A story of England an the days of Henry VIII. and Wolsey and Thom s Cromwell. The Scriptures were being translated by Tyndale. The country was disturbed by the dissolution of the monasteries and the consequent forcing of hundreds of beggars upon the towns and villages. Men's minds were in a turmoil with the religious dissensions of the time, and the outlook from every point was gloomy. Of this seething, anxious period we are given a good picture in this history of Sir Miles Paton, the Oxfordshire landlord and adherent of the 'new learning' as taught by Erasmus. Paton assists Tyndale, and his views as to the duties of a landlord and the education of the people are far in advance of his time. As a youth he had been one of Wolsey's secretaries, and he wins his wife under romantic circumstances. The author makes a mistake in speaking of baronets as existing in Henry's time—they were the invention of the sapient James I. We commend this book for its presentation of one of the greatest eras in our history.

Dauntless Dick, a Story, by the author of 'Bird's Nest Farm,' illustrated. Dick is a sailor's son, and hopes to go to sea himself and be a captain. But he soon finds he has to become captain of the little homestead his father left behind him, and help to steer his mother, sisters, and brothers through the troubled waters of poverty. Dick is a brave lad, firm in his adherence to principle, and his honesty carries him safely over the trials that befall him. The story is agreeably written, and instils a moral boys should not lose sight of.

In the Toils of the Tribesmen, a Story of the Indian Frontier, by Bessie Marchant. The perils of missionaries among the superstitious people of Shankoash, one of the most benighted places in all India, and the heroic manner in which they met persecution and bondage, are well delineated in this tale, which touches also on the horrors of suttee or wife-burning, and the miserable business of certain Englishmen in supplying arms to their country's enemies. Coralie Blake and her father, mother, and sister are the workers in this unpromising vineyard, but their labours are not in vain. The Ranee of Rasputya, succeeding her father, tries to rule her country fairly and justly, but many hindrances obstruct her plans, and there is much fighting ere light is seen ahead.

The Camp in the Hills, illustrated, is a sequel to 'Dauntless Dick,' in which is recounted his further adventures and the good fortune that arose from his having, at a critical time in his career, made a determined stand for what he believed to be the truth.

Penelope's Experiences in England and Penelope's Experiences in Scotland, by Kate Douglas Wiggin, illustrated by C. E. Brock. Among the many graceful writers whom America has produced during recent years, few have a lighter, daintier touch than has Mrs. Wiggin. These two books from her pen make capital holiday reading, and with the embellishment of the illustrations by Mr. Brock we can imagine no more acceptable Christmas gifts for young people. The artist has most admirably caught the spirit of his author, and he reproduces it with inimitable humour and quaintness. There is a good deal of quiet fun in the text, and not a point is missed in the pictures. Indeed these two volumes are in every way among the prettiest of the season's books. Of the charm—often inconsequent, and always genuinely feminine—of these narratives of Penelope's many experiences in England and Scotland we need hardly speak. Mrs. Wiggin is in the fortunate position of being almost equally popular on both sides of the Atlantic. She is able to reckon her sales by the hundred thousand—a fact which speaks more eloquently of success than any words we could use. But we say with emphasis that none who sees these delightful volumes will be disappointed with them, and that those who do not make a point of seeing them will miss one of the treats of the season.

Another daintily produced little volume for which we have to thank Messrs. Gay & Bird is Dr. Johnson's Table Talk, which forms the latest addition to the 'Bibelots' series. It is furnished with a biographical introduction, and is conveniently arranged in three parts, devoted respectively to aphorisms, anecdotes, and estimates of authors. The selections have the real Johnsonian flavour, and as a pocket or bedside companion the volume deserves to be popular.

From the Egyptian Ramleh, Sketches of Delta Life and Scenes in Lower Egypt, by the Rev. Alexander A. Boddy, F.R.G.S. Mr. Boddy, who is the vicar of All Saints, Monkwearmouth, 'did' Egypt on a bicycle, and was armed with a Kodak. He writes in an easy, chatty style, and if he tells us nothing that is very new, he at any rate manages to gossip very amiably about the domestic life of the natives, Anglo-Egyptian life, places, rivers, monuments, and missionary enterprise. Over 270 photographs decorate the book, and they convey a very good idea of the things he saw.

Messrs. GRIFFITH, FARRAN, BROWNE & CO., Limited.

The Three Scouts, a Tale of the Boer War, by Fred. Whishaw, illustrated by George Soper. The South African war provided splendid scope for our novelists, and it was natural that they should abundantly avail themselves of it. Mr. Whishaw has taken the field, metaphorically—but with a difference. Instead of details of battles, and awful suffering, and a deluge of blood, he has written a very neat story indeed of pluck, ingenuity, and resource exhibited by the young Englishmen who are his heroes in their efforts to elude their Boer adversaries and escape from the prison at Pretoria. Geoff and 'Bunny' Bigby, declined by the authorities as combatants, take to scouting. After one of their rides they are surprised by Boers as they lie asleep in a farmhouse. The upshot of this is that while Geoff regains his liberty, 'Bunny' finds himself a prisoner in Pretoria. Geoff returns to Durban, and he and another brother, Hugh, determine upon a plan of rescuing 'Bunny.' A daring, impossible plan, it appears, but coolness, sublime assurance, and keenness carry them through, and 'Bunny' and a friend, who is also a prisoner, leave their Boer friends to regret their loss. But the feat is not achieved without many anxious moments and the risk of detection and death should a single mistake be made. There is a villain in the piece; and two Dutch girls have prominent parts in the great scheme. The book is a truly delightful one, and should be widely read.

From The Three Scouts

Uncle Charlie's Seaside Stories have now been added to the 'Uncle Charlie' series of Books for the Nursery, and should be as popular as the other collections of tales that have appeared. The illustrations are first-rate and there are many of them, and the stories are of the kind that all children love to listen to.

The Story of Moses, The Story of Israel, and The Promised Land, are the latest additions to the Newbery Bible Series. These volumes have coloured covers, and are very well illustrated throughout. They should meet with ready acceptance in Sunday schools, being especially suited to young children.

Granny's Wonderful Chair, and its Tales of Fairy Times, by Frances Browne, illustrated by Marie Seymour Lucas. This reprint of 'Granny's Wonderful Chair' enables children to make acquaintance with some fairy stories that were extremely popular years ago. It was issued first in 1856, and soon went out of print. Re-issued in 1880, it renewed its popularity, fresh editions appearing frequently until 1889. A note to the present publication mentions a curious circumstance in relation to the book. In 1887 Mrs. Hodgson Burnett commenced in St. Nicholas 'The Story of Prince Fairyfoot,' intended as the first of a series under the title of 'Stories from the Lost Fairy Book, Retold by the Child who Read Them.' It was immediately discovered that the lost fairy book was the volume called 'Granny's Wonderful Chair and the Tales it Told.' In regard to this, Mrs. Burnett wrote in St. Nicholas, in February 1887, that when she was a child she was given a fairy book which, after some months, disappeared, and though she had tried repeatedly, both in England and America, to find a copy of it, she was never able to do so. It was concluded that it had been out of print some time. She frequently told what she could recall of the stories to children, adding something of her own. She wrote the story of 'Prince Fairyfoot' for a little girl, and because she liked it so much thought others would also, and so planned the rewriting of the other stories, under the title of 'Stories from the Lost Fairy Book,' as stated. 'Granny's Wonderful Chair' is a perfectly delightful book, and children are sure to enjoy it. The illustrations are almost as good as the stories, and no higher praise could be given. The book is very prettily 'got up.'

Early Days among the Boers, or the Diamond Hunters of South Africa, by Major-General A. W. Drayson, F.R.A.S., illustrated by A. W. Cooper. General Drayson's story relates to the period when there were only two towns in the colony of Natal, and they hardly deserved the name. Durban, or D'Urban, as the name was then spelled, consisted of a few scattered huts, built of wattle and daub, i.e. a framework of wood, something after the fashion of a hurdle, plastered over with mud. Pietermaritzburg boasted three or four parallel streets. It was not many years since the Boers, trekking from Cape Colony to escape British rule, had settled in Natal, where they thought they would be free to govern themselves as they wished. In this they were disappointed, British authority soon taking in the colony, which the Boers subsequently left for the Orange River and the Transvaal. General Drayson's book is not so much a story with a plot, as a series of incidents in the life of the Dean family, the two sons of which go hunting, gold-finding, and diamond-searching. The Zulus were then a menace to all white settlers; when not fighting with Boer or Briton, they were 'wiping out' the adjacent tribes. There are plenty of adventures in the book, which we have read with considerable pleasure, and are grateful to General Drayson for his animated picture of a condition of things in South Africa that has long since passed away, but which should be remembered, as therein were laid the foundations of our supremacy which recent events have consolidated.

The Beauforts, by L. T. Meade. New edition. There is little need to recommend this book for girls. A new edition being called for is the best witness to its merit. The pretty story it tells, misunderstandings put right by love and true friendship, is as graceful and tender as any its author has written: and this re-issue should make it more widely known than ever.

The Opal Mountain, a Tale of Adventure, by Henry Frith, illustrated by I. Schonberg. Events move vigorously in this well-written story. The Upton party—two brothers, with their four sons—are travelling slowly with their wagon-train through Kentucky. Two of the boys are lost in the woods. They come upon a deserted oil city—deserted of all but dogs and cats, and one old sailor, who had been left behind to die. He tells them of the secret Opal Mountain, confides to them certain cryptic maps and plans; and dies. The boys are found by their friends, and while they are discussing the sailor's story in his shanty, they are overheard by three rascals, who had crept back to the city for some evil purpose. The search for the Opal Mountain involves terrible experiences and startling adventures, which Mr. Frith recounts with considerable skill. Wealth—fabulous wealth—comes to the Uptons in the end.

Won from the Waves, by W. H. G. Kingston. Many aspirants for favour as writers of stories for boys have sprung up since Kingston's days, but it is gratifying to find that this fine writer is not yet forgotten amid the crowd of competitors for the position he held for so many years. This handsome edition of 'Won from the Waves,' well printed, bound, and illustrated, should secure further popularity for a writer who in his line has not been surpassed by any of his successors.

Gladys the Reaper, by Anne Beale. 'Gladys the Reaper' is fashioned on the lines to which Miss Beale has for a long time accustomed us. It flows along quietly, evenly, in a style not far above the colloquial; the incidents fit in appropriately, the conversations are to the purpose; there is no difficulty as to the category of the characters—in short, it possesses all the attributes of a pleasant story, and is eminently suited for family reading. The scene is a village in Carmarthenshire, on the road the Irish harvesters take after they land from Ireland to seek work in England. A party of Irish people are grouped about the entrance to the Protheros' farm. In the centre is Gladys, a girl of seventeen; she is overcome with fatigue, and can go no further. Her friends appeal to Mrs. Prothero to help her, and she does so. Who or what the girl is no one knows, as her friends go away; and difficulties arise. But in the end it is proved that she is as well connected as any of them. Miss Beale portrays a host of characters, and portrays them distinctly. She draws a picture of Welsh life and manners that shows a thorough knowledge of the people and sympathy with them, and she deals kindly with their failings. A flavour of sincere religious feeling pervades the book, which, we repeat, is excellently suited for family reading.

Paid in Gold, a Tale of a Treasure, by Bertie Senior, illustrated by Frank Feller. This is a story somewhat out of the ordinary run of boys' stories. Mr. Senior is a capable writer, and he manages the complicated machinery of his plot with much success. The boy Antholia De Sabra is the hero, but the narrative is really the history of a false accusation against his father, and of the machinations of the real thief to screen himself and get the boy into his own clutches for safety. It is supposed that the father is dead, but he is all the time a teacher in a school in California, to which Antholia is sent. The treasure which is the cause of so much trouble is hidden in a disused mining tunnel; the thief had hidden it there. Antholia is kidnapped and brought to a place in England, where a strict watch is kept over him. He manages, however, to break away, returns to America, and after various exciting incidents, one of which is his arrest for murder, at last establishes his innocence, and his father, also clearing himself from disgrace, reveals himself. It occurs to us that much is made of very little, and needless mystery surrounds the action of Mr. Senior's characters—but then he has given us a good story.

Steady and Strong, or a Friend in Need, by R. M. Freeman, illustrated by A. Foord-Hughes. A bracing school story, which may be read with pleasure and profit by boys. The two friends, Owen and Cartwright, are sturdy specimens of the English lad, upright, healthy, fond of all sports, and not too neglectful of their studies. Contrasted with them are Marshall, Skipwith, and Fletcher, who get into the clutches of swindling betting men. These three enter into a conspiracy which seems likely to ruin both Cartwright and Owen for ever—and only the astuteness of Cartwright's father, a great barrister, saves them. The story is well put together, and a high ideal of duty and honour is set before its readers.

The Weathercock, being the Adventures of a Boy with a Bias, by Geo. Manville Fenn, illustrated by A. W. Cooper. 'The Weathercock,' the 'boy with a bias,' is Vane Lee; his bias is to make the best of everything, to make friends and not enemies, to spread sunshine and happiness around, and not gloom and misery. He and three others are pupils reading with a Lincolnshire clergyman—one of them, Distin, a West Indian boy, hates Lee, and hires some gipsies to attack him. When, afterwards, Lee discovers Distin's share in the matter, he forgives him, and helps to shield him from the consequences of his act. Lee has the inventive faculty strongly marked; the lives of his associates are often in jeopardy from his experiments. But he detects a flaw in a certain invention by his uncle's friend that saves his relative a great financial loss, and brings fortune to the inventor. A cheerful story, which should greatly please the youngsters.

From Paid in Gold

Messrs. HARPER & BROTHERS.

Whilomville Stories, by Stephen Crane, illustrated by Peter Newell. These thirteen stories, reprinted from Harper's Magazine, are the last things Mr. Crane wrote, and probably the last productions of his pen that will see the light. One reads them sadly, remembering the life that promised—and had done—so brilliantly, and that was cut off 'ere its prime.' The tales are all short, and deal with children; and they have the directness of phrase, the quick eye for a picture, and the cunning hand to delineate it that we know so well. The first, 'The Angel Child,' is a veritable tragedy of children's lives. The 'Angel' has five dollars given her on her birthday, and she and her friends gorge themselves with ices, sweets, and other horrors, and then all have their hair cut. The sequel, the bitter wailings, come when they return to their homes. The boys in these stories are very engaging youngsters, with a large spice of wickedness in them; and the little girls are true daughters of Eve. The book is full of talent and observation—alas that it should be the last we shall receive from Stephen Crane!

'Twixt Town and Country, a Book of Suburban Gardening, by Roma White, with frontispiece. There are many books on gardening, but room remains for this, which is written for town and suburban garden-holders only. It is a very complete, thorough work, instructing us on suitable and unsuitable trees, flowering bushes and shrubs, the management of small beds, the arrangements necessary for constant bloom, seed-sowing, smoky gardens, and a host of other matters important to be remembered by the dweller in town or suburb who would keep a garden. The book is remarkably well written, compact, and cheap; we know of no other on the particular branch of gardening with which it deals that gives so much information in so small a compass.

Chloris of the Island, a novel, by H. B. Marriott-Watson, with illustrations. A 'costume' romance. Very gallantly does Mr. Marriott-Watson tell his breezy story; quickly does he get to business, and he enters into the life of a dead-and-gone period as if he had himself lived in it. We are introduced to an eloping couple hurrying across the country to London; and to them speedily appears Warburton, the eloping Jack Shirley's great friend, and an adjournment to an inn to drink the lady's health—Dorothy is her name—is the proper course to take. Chloris and her brother, Nick Carmichael, are already there. The wine is freely quaffed—and Nick and Jack quarrel. Naturally, a duel follows, and, alas! for Dorothy—her lover is killed. Henceforth Warburton lives to avenge his friend. The Carmichaels are traitors to the King; smugglers also—while Nick is the terror of the countryside bordering on their island home. What adventures ensue may be guessed; the love story of Chloris and Warburton may be hinted at. A remarkably fine romance is 'Chloris of the Island.'

The Book of Dragons, by E. Nesbit, with illustrations by H. R. Millar, and decorations by H. Granville Fell. Miss Nesbit's dragons are a wild and fiery gang, as they should be, of course, for 'tis their nature so to be. They amble gaily up and down the land, gobbling up unconsidered trifles in the shape of humanity, animals, and birds, and the world is for them the best of all possible worlds—for a while. Then comes the reckoning, and they laugh no more. By whose hands, by what means, is the secret of this capital book, which we recommend to all children. It is one of the author's best in this line, and, as children know by this time, when she is at her best she is very good. The pictures and decorations are equally attractive.

Wonder Stories from Herodotus, re-told by G. H. Boden and W. Barrington D'Almeida, and decorated with pictures by H. Granville Fell. Here is the book for the jaded modern who would fain escape for a while from his prosaic surroundings and the books of his generation that but accentuate the greyness of his existence. We are very grateful for it, for here are romance, poetry, imagination, and wonder. These magic stories are 'retold' vividly; we are transported to old Egypt, Persia, and Greece, and revel in the time when life was spacious and full of awe and marvel and adventure. The beautiful coloured pictures greatly enhance the charm of a book that can be read and re-read.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN.

Fairy Tales, by Hans Christian Andersen, newly translated by H. L. Brækstad, with an Introduction by Edmund Gosse, illustrated by Hans Tegner. It may safely be said that this edition of Andersen, dedicated to the Princess of Wales, is the most magnificent that has ever been issued in England. It is comprised in two large volumes, which in printing, binding, and general arrangement, are everything that could be desired as regards appearance. The 240 wood engravings by Hans Tegner, the most distinguished Danish black-and-white draughtsman of the day, are in perfect consonance with the stories they illustrate. The originals occupied the artist for fifteen years, and are to be placed finally in the Danish National Museum. They are fascinating in their originality, their power, their humour, pathos, and picturesqueness. The landscape, the architecture, the costume, the faces of the human beings, everything in them is, as Mr. Gosse says, exclusively and characteristically Danish; and this fact gives them additional value and charm. Mr. Brækstad has produced a version that will probably supersede the other English translations; it seems to render the very spirit of the tales. Mr. Gosse's introduction includes some particulars of Andersen's life, notes on his early fairy tales, indications of their source and inspiration, and personal reminiscences of the great Danish magician. It is curious to read that Andersen set little store on these trifles, as he called his fairy stories; he expected and desired to be known as the author of novels of passion and society, five-act dramas, and serious poetry. To the last almost he persisted in believing that the critics and the public had made a mistake in preferring the famous tales. In these for the first time in Danish literature the language of children and uneducated people of the lower middle-class was heard, greatly shocking the early critics and cultivated readers. Andersen himself could never quite get over the feeling of the daring and presumption of his act. He used to read his work to his friends before publication, and Mr. Gosse recalls a summer day in 1872 when, in a room of a beautiful house overlooking the sea, just outside the fortifications at Copenhagen, Andersen read to him 'The Cripple,' which he intended to be his last story. It was not—there was one more yet to come—but it summed up his methods; it presented symbolically his imaginative message to mankind. It is a sort of defence of fairy tales and of their teller. On August 4, 1875, he fell asleep in the same room, and never woke again.

A Little Tour in France, by Henry James, with ninety-four illustrations by Joseph Pennell. Mr. James's 'Little Tour' recalls Sterne's 'Sentimental Journey'—with a difference. Sterne lumped most of the towns he passed through together—there was nothing to tell about them. Mr. James lingers lovingly, there is so much to tell—and he is often minute in his telling. In a characteristic preface he seems to apologise for his work; the notes, he says, 'are impressions, immediate, easy, and consciously limited.' 'Deeply devoted always to the revelations of France,' he 'finds himself, late in life, making of the sentiment no more substantial, no more direct record than this mere revival of an accident.' This kind of regret is, perhaps, natural to most observers, most writers; but, in Mr. James's case, it need not prevent us from enjoying 'A Little Tour' as it stands, taking it, as he remarks, for what it is worth. It is worth a great deal. The very air, the 'feeling' of the old towns, with their churches, their parks, public halls, winding streets, is conveyed delicately, finely, with art so cunning that it never obtrudes, and the sketches of people are warm with human sympathy. Here is what he saw at Carcassonne. 'A poor man in a very old blouse, crippled, and with crutches lying beside him, had been brought out and placed on a stool, where he enjoyed the afternoon as best he might. . . . I spoke to him, found that his legs were paralysed, and he was quite helpless. He had formerly been seven years in the army, and had made the campaign of Mexico with Bazaine. Born in the old cité, he had come back there to end his days. It seemed strange, as he sat there with those romantic walls behind him and the great picture of the Pyrenees in front, to think that he had been across the seas to the far-away new world, had made part of a famous expedition, and was now a cripple at the gate of the mediæval city where he had played as a child. All this struck me as a great deal of history for so modest a figure—a poor little figure that could only just unclose its palm for a small silver coin.' In 'A Little Tour' Mr. James has certainly given us some of his finest work. The volume is also a triumph for Mr. Pennell. The twelve photogravures, thirty-two full-page engravings, and forty illustrations in the text are little masterpieces.

The Eagle's Heart, by Hamlin Garland. Harold Excell, the hero of this 'out-West' story, had a hasty temper, to say the least. Among his pleasing habits was the carrying of a knife, and he would 'out with it' at any, or hardly any, provocation. It does not surprise us when he finds himself in jail, after having thus stabbed a companion. There he hears a voice—the voice of a girl singing for the prisoners—and henceforth there is but one woman in the world for him. Out of prison again, he goes West to make his fortune and marry the owner of the beautiful voice. But much happens before she is his: years roll by, misunderstandings arise, fortune ebbs and flows. Mr. Garland writes of what he knows, and his pictures of cowboy life are wonderfully vivid, full of colour and life. This is a sterling story which should be widely read.

Characters of Romance, by William Nicholson. Mr. Nicholson follows up his 'Alphabet' and 'London Characters' by this imposing portfolio of sixteen pastels reproduced in colours. The 'Characters' include Tony Weller, Don Quixote, Mr. Rochester, Sophia Western, Porthos, Miss Fotheringay and Captain Costigan, Madge Wildfire, Mulvaney, John Silver, Commodore Trunnion, Mr. Jorrocks, Gargantua, Vanslyperken, Baron Munchausen, Miss Havisham, and Chicot. Mr. Nicholson's methods are well known. The manner of his early posters is the manner of these pastels—a seemingly rough style, which throws their originality, humour, and keenness of observation into high relief. The result is striking and unique. All the characters depicted are excellent in their imaginativeness, in their sense of life, in their exposition of temperament.

William Cotton Oswell, Hunter and Explorer, the Story of his Life, by his eldest Son, W. Edward Oswell, with an Introduction by Francis Galton, portraits, maps, and illustrations, two vols. The name of Oswell is practically unknown to our generation, and mainly for the reason that he was the most self-effacing of men, always eager to remain in obscurity, leaving to others, if they so desired, the credit that should really have been his. He shrank from publicity, and, as Dr. Galton says, from even the most legitimate forms of self-assertion. It is therefore a service to his fellow-men that this 'realisation of the perfect and gentle knight of whom we read in old romances' should be known for what he was and did. The work of portraying him has been done by his son in an excellent manner; he tells a true, unvarnished tale, allowing letters to speak for themselves; and the result is a picture strangely attractive, and—when we remember that for the last thirty years of Oswell's life he lived unknown and unappreciated, save by his family and friends—strangely pathetic. He was born in 1818; was at Rugby in the great days of Arnold, Stanley, Vaughan, and Clough, and had the author of 'Tom Brown's Schooldays' for a schoolfellow; and, after passing from Haileybury with great credit, went to India in the service of 'John' Company. In 1844 the accident of illness brought the most stirring period, the most abiding interest, of his life. As a last chance of recovery he was ordered to the Cape. He stayed two years in Africa, and, with two companions, went far beyond the limits of previous geographical knowledge, exploring and hunting. An intimate acquaintance sprang up between him and Dr. Livingstone, which endured to the end of the famous missionary's life. It was Oswell who identified Livingstone's remains when they were brought to England for interment in Westminster Abbey. This work contains 'certain correspondence and extracts from the private journal of Livingstone, hitherto unpublished,' and of rare interest. Again, in 1848, Oswell was in Africa, preparing for one of the most epoch-making of modern expeditions, that which, 'by traversing wastes previously impassable to Europeans, succeeded in connecting the pastoral uplands . . . with the lakes and rivers of the equatorial part of the continent.' Livingstone went as a guest—it was the beginning of his heroic career, and another friend, Murray, was of the party. Starting from Graham's Town, the expedition, led by Oswell, crossed the Kalahari, and eventually discovered the River Zouga and Lake Ngami. The story of this important journey was first known through Livingstone's letters; Oswell took 'greater pleasure in ministering to the reputation of Livingstone than to his own,' and, in the public mind, though the missionary never claimed it, the fame attached to this enterprise was Livingstone's. On a third trip to Africa, Oswell again was of the utmost assistance to Livingstone and his family; indeed, it is not too much to say that, but for Oswell, a large part of Livingstone's work would not have been accomplished. We need not touch upon Oswell's other explorations, and the career after leaving Africa finally—all fully set out in these intensely interesting volumes. It is Oswell's glory that, throughout his travels, he found a road to the hearts of the natives; that his path through trackless regions was not marked by human blood; and by his treatment of the people he made the way easier to all who came after him. Oswell was greater than his work; he was, with only the exception of Livingstone himself, probably the finest, noblest European that ever set foot in South Africa. This is much to say; but these records reveal a great soul—a man of genuine talent.

INDIAN SCENE. From William Cotton Oswell

Mr. B. HERDER, Freiburg.

Turkestan, die Wiege der indogermanischen Völker, nach fünfzehnjährigem Aufenthalt in Turkestan, dargestellt von Franz von Schwartz, mit einem Titelbild in Farbendruck, 178 Abbildungen und einer Karte. Certainly Herr von Schwartz enjoyed peculiar advantages for satisfactorily accomplishing the arduous task of writing a work of such magnitude as the volume before us, about a region comparatively so little known to Europeans as that which is somewhat arbitrarily called Turkestan. For early in 1874 he was invited by the Russian General von Kauffmann to undertake the post of astronomer at the observatory of Tashkend. As the observatory was under the supervision of the chief of the military topographical division of the general staff, he was frequently entrusted with the determination of latitudes and longitudes, and barometrical altitudes which were to serve as a basis for the great ordnance map of Turkestan, and consequently was enabled to traverse that country in all directions almost every year. Herr von Schwartz remained at the Tashkend observatory until 1890, when the repeated petty annoyances and slights received from his superior, General Schilinsky, at length obliged him to relinquish his appointment and return to Münich, where he wrote an account of his fifteen years' personal observations and experiences, supplemented and corrected by the existing literature on Turkestan to which he had access in the Münich city library.

Our author has much to tell of the encroachments of Russia, to which acquisitive Power by far the largest part of Turkestan already belongs. The rulers of Khiva and Bokhara, although nominally independent, are now completely in the hands of the Russians, and are practically nothing more than Russian governors.

Partly owing to the difficulty of access through enormous deserts, and partly owing to the internecine wars which almost constantly prevailed, Turkestan has until recently been little known and less visited, although it is one of the most interesting lands on the face of the earth. And, as Herr von Schwartz says: 'There is no other country which has played such an important part in the history of mankind as Central Asia, nor one the thorough knowledge of which and its people is so indispensable to the understanding of history as the knowledge of the Turkestan of to-day and its inhabitants. For Turkestan was the point of departure for all the cultured people of these present times.'

Beginning with an account of the origin of the present inhabitants of Turkestan, and of their various types and characteristics, the author goes on to describe the manners, customs, and way of living of the nomad tribes; he then particularises the manners and usages of the domiciled population, treats of the sanitary conditions of Turkestan, and concludes with an account of the climatological condition of the country.

It is impossible to convey in a brief notice an adequate idea of the mass of information of the most varied and interesting character contained in this work, of which the text and illustrations are equally attractive. The Kirghese, it may be mentioned, do not rove about the country from pure love of a gypsy life, but because it is impossible, owing to climatic circumstances, to remain all the year round on the selfsame spot in the Turkestan steppes, and because of the difficulty in obtaining fodder and water for the cattle.

It is difficult to over-estimate the value of Herr von Schwartz's work at the present day, when Russia and Asia are on everyone's lips. This is a book to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

Australien und Tasmanien, nach eigener Anschauung und Forschung wissenschaftlich und praktisch geschildert von Dr. Joseph Lauterer, M.D., J.P., &c., mit einem Titelbild in Farbendruck, 158 Abbildungen und einer Karte. The author claims for this very valuable contribution to our knowledge of the Australian continent that it is an original work; and in this he is fully justified. For his travels through all parts of Australia, his studies of its physical and geological condition, his observations and researches into its animal, botanical, and mineral products, amply equipped him for the task of making a comparative use of the wealth of English, French, and German literature at his disposal; to which he has added much that is new, while confirming that which his experience has shown to be true, and has refuted or rejected what is erroneous.

He has divided his work into eleven chapters. The first three are devoted to an animated and vastly instructive log of the passage out by steamer from Hamburg by way of London and the Suez Canal. Of Aden Dr. Lauterer remarks: 'England took possession of this place in 1839, and fortified it like Gibraltar. Formerly only about forty traders lived here, and the rest of the inhabitants gained a living by wrecking and robbery. Now the population numbers 40,000 souls.' Surely no bad result of British influence and enterprise. Chapter four relates the various accounts of the discovery of Australia and its subsequent history, affording glimpses of the famous buccaneer and navigator William Dampier, the rescuer of Alexander Selkirk from the island of Juan Fernandez, an incident Dampier himself related in a book which afforded Defoe material for that typical romance of British pluck, 'Robinson Crusoe,' a name which has long since overshadowed that of the real Simon Pure. Very attractive is the story of the early convict settlements, and of the various explorations undertaken from the twenties until the fifties. The fifth chapter treats of the geology of Australia; the sixth of its climatology and meteorology; and the two following deal with its animal and vegetable products. A full and valuable account of the manners, customs, language, music, and superstitions of the black aborigines is given in the ninth chapter, which abounds in curious information about this remnant of a people, destined, as the author believes, to become extinct ere the new century shall have ended. In the tenth chapter are graphically described the colonists, among whom are representatives of all the nations of the earth: 'although,' Dr. Lauterer adds, 'the British naturally form the trunk of the tree into whose branches the other nations are, so to say, absorbed.' The eleventh—which is also the last and longest — chapter, and on which the author has expended more than usual care, is devoted to the topography of Australia. The descriptions of scenery are made from his own personal observation, and their interest and value are enhanced by the excellent photographic reproductions illustrating this chapter, and with which, indeed, the volume from end to end is lavishly adorned. One of them—a view of Darling Downs—is given here. 'In the far distance,' says the author, 'may be dimly seen the pass through which in 1827 the first white man from the West found his way into the fertile plains of Darling Downs.'

A work so full of interest and information not only affords delightful reading for the library or fireside, but would also prove a pleasant companion and guide on a voyage to Australia. It need scarcely be added that this handsome volume exhibits all that scrupulous accuracy in the printed text and consummate taste in the illustrations and binding for which the Herder'sche Verlagshandlung is famed.

Church Folks, by Ian Maclaren. A wise little book on the attitude of a congregation to its minister, of a minister to his congregation, on the problem of the aged or worn-out pastor, and on modern tendencies in public worship. A mordant humour brightens every page, and lightens the strictures of a kindly, gentle, shrewd, and experienced observer. Ian Maclaren is not enamoured of the devices to which many churches—especially in America—resort to attract people or to prevent them from 'wearying in the worship of God.' 'Smart' preachers, church parlours, ice-cream suppers and picnics, all the contrivances by which things are made to 'hum,' leave much to be desired. Reverence is lacking, and 'the fear of God' and 'the sense of the unseen.' However it may be in the places whereof he speaks, these are never absent in this altogether stimulating, admirable volume.

The Golden Gate of Prayer, devotional studies on the Lord's Prayer, by J. R. Miller, D.D. This volume, which is very pretty in its white, blue, and gold covers, consists of fifteen short studies on the Lord's Prayer, the aim of which is to help in a devotional way by calling attention to the meaning of its petitions, which is often lost to us because of our familiarity with its words. The expositions are given in a simple, homely fashion, and the book is to be commended; it is reverent in tone, and should be very useful.

'HOME WORDS' PUBLISHING OFFICE.

Home Words for Heart and Hearth, 1900, conducted by the Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. This annual maintains its high standard. Chatty articles, stories, verse, and music provide plenty of interesting and amusing reading; and there are scores of beautiful pictures to please the eye. Among the contributors are Sarah Doudney, Sir Martin Conway, Frank Bullen, and Frederick Langbridge.

The Day of Days Annual, 1900, edited by the Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. The twenty-ninth volume of this annual well maintains the traditions that have made it for so long welcome to its readers. Biographies of leading Churchmen, useful papers on religious subjects, hints for housewives, critical and expository notes on the Bible, short stories and poems, and telling incidents, and a profusion of pictures, should render it as popular as ever. The little readers are well cared for. Among the contributors are Professor Moule, Bishop Walsh, the Bishop of Ripon, Mrs. Charles Garnett, and Edward Garrett.

Children's Sayings, edited, with a Digression on the Small People, by William Canton, with a frontispiece. The frontispiece is after Sir Joshua Reynolds's lovely picture of children's heads,

With the bloom of Paradise,

The picture, if we remember aright, is in the National Gallery. The beauty of it is reflected throughout the book. Mr. Canton's 'Digression' is a piece of writing that all lovers of children will thank him for. It is tender, wise, and withal instructive. The 'Sayings,' of which there are scores, are of all kinds, betraying all the secrets of the mysterious little minds in which they originated; deep, kind, witty, mystical, pathetic, practical, jocular, by turn, and always entrancing. 'How much do you love mother?' a little child was asked. 'Up to the sky, along a bit, and down on the other side.' A tiny boy was saying that if his mother died, he should dig her up. His brother replied: 'Yours is a very stupid plan; when "farver" dies, I'm going to have him stuffed!' Passing by the little girl who was asked if a chocolate would make a pain she had better, and answered that it would not, but two might; we come to, and must conclude with, the youngster, who in repeating his hymn did it thus:

I'm a little pilgrim,
And a stranger here;
Though this world is pleasant,
Sunday is always near.

The reading of this book confers a benefit upon the reader.

Good Words, 1900, edited by the Very Rev. Donald Macleod, D.D. This favourite magazine for the home is as good as ever. Dr. Macleod, who has conducted it for so long and so ably, has gathered round him a notable band of literary and artistic contributors, and the fruits of their labours are spread before us in most appetising and profuse fashion. Mr. John Buchan writes the serial, 'The Half-Hearted,' and short stories appear from the pens of Mr. William Canton, Miss Constance Cotterell, Mr. Harold Bindloss, Mr. J. F. Davey, and others. Biographical articles are a great feature. There are religious papers, essays on literary subjects, science, natural history, travel, out-of-door and descriptive articles, and poetry—all written in the excellent manner to which 'Good Words' has accustomed us. Mr. G. H. Boughton, R.A., Mr. Gordon Browne, Miss Montbard, and Mr. John Faed, R.S.A., are among the artists whose work enriches the pages—there are over eight hundred of them—of this sterling annual.

The Sunday Magazine, 1900. There is a perennial freshness about this annual. For Sunday reading where can its superior be found? It contains nearly nine hundred pages of stories, general articles, verse, and illustrations: all high above the average of similar publications. Dr. John Watson writes a series of papers on 'Children of the Resurrection,' the Bishop of Ripon has twelve articles on the 'Religious Element in the Poets,' and there is also a series on 'Remarkable Trophies of the Mission Field.' Eleanor C. Price writes the serial story; there are numerous short stories by Mr. William Canton and other well-known writers; biographical and autobiographical papers, and many more on numerous interesting subjects—the tastes of all readers are considered. The pictures are on the same high level as the letterpress.

The Young Woodranger, a Story of the Pioneers of the Debatable Grounds, by G. Waldo Browne, illustrated by L. J. Bridgman. The debatable grounds lay between Massachusetts and New Hampshire, in the vicinity of the Merrimac River. In the early part of the eighteenth century a bitter dispute prevailed as to which province had jurisdiction over them; and long and disastrous were the feuds between the settlers on them—the party of colonists from the north of Ireland, known as Scotch-Irish from their having emigrated originally from Scotland, and the survivors of the famous 'Snow Shoe Expedition.' The white people quarrelled among themselves, and all the time there hung over them the menace of the Indians, strong and ably led. Among the Scotch-Irish settlers are Norman McNiel, his father and grandfather. Upon the father a dark suspicion of murder hangs. Then there is the mysterious Woodranger, who eventually clears away the cloud, and the Christ in Sacred Art, by Joseph Lewis French, illustrated. Mr. French calls his work an essay, but it is much more than is implied by that word; it is a valuable study of one of the most fascinating of subjects, and he has collected a mass of facts full of the greatest interest. Under the headings of the Christ-Child, Christ as Teacher and Healer, Christ as Martyr, Christ Dead and Arisen, he describes and discusses the pictures that have been prompted by these manifestations of Christ's life and death and resurrection. To do so he has gone back to the origins of Christian Art, travelled through the centuries, and come to our own day. This effort to 'set down some of the attempts that have been made, under varying degrees of inspiration and influence, to picture the Saviour and His life-work' must be pronounced eminently successful. The greatest artists the world has known dedicated their genius to the great subject, and many of their pictures are reproduced in this work. Among them is the 'Transfiguration,' of Raphael, 'peculiarly sacred to Art because to it was consecrated the greatest work of the greatest painter of all time.' It is singular to note that the scene contained in the account of Mark, beginning, 'And they brought young children to Him, that He should touch them,' was first dealt with by the home-loving Teutonic races. The Italian schools do not, Mr. French says, furnish a single noteworthy example. In the British Museum we have the very first representation of the crucifixion, of which more pictures have been painted than of any other subject in Art. It is a carving on ivory, attributed to about the fifth century. Mr. French's book is extremely well got up, and should appeal alike to the religiously and the artistically inclined.

On Sea and Prairie, a Story from Life, by Charles G. Coleman, illustrated by J. B. Greene. Mr. Coleman writes in the first person, and assures the reader that every word of his narrative is true. One of his experiences reminds us of a story that has done duty elsewhere more than once. Out in the wilds of Mexico he and a friend slept at a rough homestead. During the night he was awakened by hearing the words, 'Don't kill them both,' and presently his host, carrying an ugly-looking knife, and his wife appeared. The man cut some portion of a side of bacon, and then the pair disappeared. In the morning Mr. Coleman found out that the words he had heard referred, not to him and his comrade, but to a couple of rabbits! For the rest our author would seem to have roughed it considerably. Sailor, herdsman, ranchman, tramp, horse-dealer, and many other things as well; he, in his wanderings over sea and land, among the Indians of Texas, and desperate characters of all sorts, North, South, East, and West, escaped from all his dangers with marvellous luck. He was a 'seventh child,' and to this he attributes no small portion of his good fortune.

Vivian of Virginia, being the Memoirs of our First Rebellion, by John Vivian, Esq., of Middle Plantation, Virginia, by Hulbert Fuller, illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. The history of the American 'plantations,' when Charles II. sent out incompetent, tyrannical, blustering, and covetous governors to rule with a rod of iron, despite the so-called free assemblies of the colonists, is not as well known as it might be. A knowledge of this epoch, however, is necessary to a complete understanding of the causes that led up, years after, to the breaking away from England. Mr. Fuller, adopting the conventional style that—may we say it?—has grown somewhat wearisome, in these 'memoirs,' that contain the autobiography of John

Vivian, gives us a lively narrative of events in and about the year 1676, when Virginia rose against the oppression of the Governor, Sir William Berkeley, and at the same time the Indians were killing and raiding indiscriminately. Vivian was a soldier of fortune, eager to place his sword at the service of anyone. In London, home from the wars, there is nothing to do, so he willingly accepts an offer to go to Virginia. No sooner there, than, like the Irishman, he is 'agin the Gov'ment'; and much flows from this. The famous rebellion, of which Bacon was the leader, finds him in the ranks of the 'rebels.' We get an animated picture of early Virginian life from this book, and its interest is various and sustained.

TO A BLUE AND WHITE SWEET PEA

Beautiful Joe, the autobiography of a Dog, by Marshall Saunders. This cheap edition of 'Beautiful Joe' brings this admirable story, this plea for kindness to animals, within the reach of even the poorest, and we trust it will have the large circulation among the people its merits and its message call for. Joe is a real dog, who was owned in his early days by a cruel fellow, who tortured him in the way described in the story.

Not Wise, but Fond, a Story for Mothers and their Daughters, by M. Montgomery-Campbell, illustrated. Katie Burton was a wilful girl, and, in consequence, she ruined her life. The only child of an engine-driver and his wife, Katie would not stay at home to assist her mother in the village post-office, neither would she enter service at the Hall. To be a milliner in the adjacent town was her ambition, and she gratified it. In the town temptation came, and Katie had cause to regret the evilness of mind that had prompted her to yearn after the bonnet shop.

A NIGHT ADVENTURE. From Snowflakes and Snowdrops (R. B. JOHNSON)

Mr. R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

Snowflakes and Snowdrops, Christmas Rhymes and Valentine Verses for Schoolroom and Nursery, by Annie Matheson, illustrated by F. Carruthers Gould and Winifred Hartley. This is in every way a very beautiful gift-book, which others besides the tiny ones would like to possess. The magic initials, 'F. C. G.' give it a special artistic value. Mr. Gould's sketches are comical in the extreme. Take that, for instance, of the two wasps who are deprecating backbiting, or that of the lizard, who wishes to give up gliding and cultivate song. He holds in his paws the song, 'I would I were a bird.' Very good, too, are Winifred Hartley's dainty, graceful drawings. Of the verses, it is difficult to select a specimen when all cry out for quotation. They are musical, distinctive, and happily phrased. Humour is not lacking, but what may be styled the serious ones are the best. We quote two stanzas from the poem, 'To the Stars':

A FAIRY FRIVOLITY From Snowflakes and Snowdrops

Shining worlds that spin aloft
With a light so pure and soft,
Swiftlier than my top can go,
Though you seem so calm and slow.
What is it that holds you up?
You are balls, but where's the cup?
* * * * * *
He who formed your lovely dust,
He in whom we children trust,
Gave you wondrous laws and powers,
So that stones and stars and flowers
Still miraculously grow
In the way the wise men know.

Greybeards at Play, Literature and Art for Old Gentlemen. Rhymes and Sketches by Gilbert Chesterton. Comically grotesque are the pictures and witty the verses that make up this sprightly volume. Children will like it; their elders will see in the clever lines something beyond the nonsense and fun; will welcome their wisdom, and be pleased with their gentle satire. Here are two verses from the dedication:

Now we are old and wise and grey,
And shaky at the knees;
Now is the true time to delight
In picture books like these.

Hoary and bent, I dance one hour:
What though I die at morn?
There is a shout among the stars,
'To-night a child is born.'

Mr. JOHN LANE.

The remarkable revival of interest in George Borrow is witnessed by the new and cheap editions of his works that have appeared recently and that have met with such success. It is a welcome sign that works—virile, healthy, thoroughly English in their qualities and even in their prejudices—like Borrow's are read in these days, some of the tendencies of which are so strongly against writings of their class. Mr. John Lane's enterprise in issuing an edition of them in dainty bindings and convenient size, and at a low price, should meet with considerable success. Already published are Borrow's masterpiece, Lavengro, the Scholar, the Gypsy, the Priest, and its sequel, the equally delightful Romany Rye. 'Lavengro' is, in a sense, an autobiography, and one of the most entertaining, quaint books in our literature. A scholar, wanderer, author, tinker, postillion, ostler, adventurer, was Lavengro; consorting with all kinds of people, chiefly of the lower classes; and racy is his narrative of his career. Two great motives possessed Borrow—a hatred of cant, a love of Protestantism as exemplified by the Church of England; and he is ever ready to pour out his wrath upon humbugs and the great enemy of his religion—the priest. He knew the gypsies as probably no other Englishman did. These books convey much curious lore concerning them. They illustrate, too, the originality, even the eccentricity, of their author, who, with a style entirely his own, is a magician whose power is willingly acknowledged by all who once come, with understanding, under his influence. 'Lavengro,' indeed, occupies a place of its own in our language—there is nothing like it, unless it be the 'Romany Rye.'

The Chronicle of a Cornish Garden, by Harry Roberts, illustrations of an ideal garden by F. L. B. Griggs. Mr. Roberts dedicates his book to the gardenless, the leisureless toilers of the world, and quotes the saying of Confucius: 'By nature we nearly resemble one another; condition separates us very far.' The condition of those of us who live 'in populous city pent,' and of those who, lucky mortals! have gardens in Cornwall or anywhere else in the country, is indeed widely separated, and this sweet book about garden joys brings the contrast vividly home to us. Mr. Roberts writes with the ardour of an enthusiast, as of course he should be with such a subject, and his enthusiasm communicates itself to the reader. He quotes the poets in praise of his favourite flowers; but, withal, he writes practically on the nature and virtue of soil, the management of a garden, and the characteristics of its denizens. He takes each month and shows us what he did in each, what flowers flourished or were planted, and gives us valuable hints against the time when our lot shall be like unto his as regards a garden. He furnishes a list of works on gardening, of border plants, rock plants, room plants, and hardy fruits, and enlightens us on bee-keeping. A thoroughly pleasant book, animated by the love of nature and a quiet life. It is set off by the pictures of ideal gardens, so neatly, prettily drawn by Mr. Griggs.

The Filipino Martyr, a Story of the Crime of February 4, 1899, by an eye-witness, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Barrister-at-Law. Mr. Sheridan believes that the American people are ignorant of what American officials, in their name, have done in the Philippines; and his book is an endeavour to bring home to them what he considers to be the truth of the matter. He was an enthusiastic advocate of America's humane policy in undertaking the war with Spain. He is as strong now in his assertions that the American people have been duped, and the Filipinos deeply wronged. He maintains that the American authorities have broken their pledges that they had not come to the islands to make war upon any party, but merely as 'the champion, the liberator of people oppressed by a bad government of Spaniards,' and have treated the Filipinos barbarously, and have, indeed, 'carried on a system of cruelty and injustice that involves a violation of all the rules of public faith and civilised warfare.' Aguinaldo, who was at first used by the Americans to help them in defeating the Spaniards, was thrown over; his election as President of the Filipino republic flouted; and then he and his followers were branded as rebels. The 'Crime of February 4' is the occurrence at Mololos, when, as Mr. Sheridan avers, the Americans fired the first shot, and the Filipino-American war broke out, giving the world the strange spectacle of the liberator at war with those she had liberated. The book is painful reading, but it should be read by all who would understand why Aguinaldo is fighting against America.

Love Poems of Shelley. An exquisite little casket is this volume, encasing some of the most beautiful musical poems in the language. It is one of 'The Lover's Library,' a series that reflects much credit upon publisher, printer, and designer alike. Among the poems in the book are the lines: 'To Constantia,'

'A Lament,' 'Mutability,' 'Lines to an Indian Air,' 'Epipsychidion,' and the magical 'Music, when Soft Voices Die'—unrivalled love poems.

In the same 'Lover's Library' is issued the Love Poems of Robert Browning, uniform with the selection from Shelley. People who have been repelled by what they have heard of Browning's ruggedness, obscurity, and lack of melody should procure this beautiful little book, and they will discover how sweet, tender, tuneful, and transparent the great poet can be. It includes some of his most delightful work; for instance, 'Meeting at Night,' verses from 'Love among the Ruins,' from 'A Lover's Quarrel,' from 'In a Gondola,' from 'Pippa Passes,' from 'Fra Lippo Lippi,' and 'The Last Ride Together,' to name but a few of the gems encased so rarely in this volume.

A Hundred Anecdotes of Animals, with pictures by Percy J. Billinghurst. This is a volume of rare artistic excellence. Mr. Billinghurst furnishes over a hundred full-page illustrations, the title-page, and coloured cover. All are marked by originality and quaintness, by rich humour and truth to life. There is little to choose between them, but perhaps the illustration to Anecdote XI., the monkey imitating the preacher, provokes most laughter. The monkey is wonderfully droll. Seated on the sounding-board over the divine's head, he is thoroughly enjoying himself; as his master lifts up his hands, he lifts up his paws, his face betraying the utmost roguery and delight in the proceedings.

A Year of Life, by William Samuel Lilly. So many of our story-tellers have turned philosophers—and show it in their stories—that it is interesting when, for a change, a philosopher transforms himself into a story-teller. Every man, we are told, has at least one novel in him—the difficulty is to get it out. Mr. Lilly has, late in life, succeeded in extracting his contribution to the stores of fiction, and has given us a Society novel as up-to-date and as 'smart' as any fashionable lady novelist's. Religion, love, art, marriage, life and death are its themes; and we have conversations on Ritualism, Roman Catholicism, the Church of England, which always get the worst of it, and other subjects Mr. Lilly has treated at length in other poems. The personages are well sketched; they have life and movement. Sir Philip Savill is the chief of them. He has 'lived his life,' and after fifteen years of it is discontented and ashamed of the selfishness of his existence. A lecture from his candid friend, Dr. Williamson, determines him to make an effort to 'do something' in art, or politics, or literature. His 'friendship' with a married woman, Lady Mary Silverton, is his great embarrassment, for he has fallen in love with Lilian Liddel, the conventional 'pure' girl. Lady Mary will not give him up. There is a great scene where Lilian is just about accepting him and Lady Mary bursts into the room and 'tells all.' Naturally, matters are precipitated; Lilian will never see him again, she declares, and he breaks with Lady Mary. But Lilian after a while relents. The book contains many other people, of which, perhaps, the Duke of Shropshire and Kitty Karsdale, the American heiress, are the most individual. 'A Year of Life' should be very successful at the libraries.

Beauty and the Beast Picture Book, with eighteen coloured pictures by Walter Crane, engraved and printed by Edmund Evans. Besides 'Beauty and the Beast,' other 'notabilities of the nursery,' to quote Mr. Crane, are included in this captivating volume—'The Frog Prince' and 'The Hind in the Wood.' There is scarcely any necessity to call attention to Mr. Crane's magnificent full-page illustrations. They are dreams of splendid colour, beautiful in conception, and perfect in execution. Never were nursery tales so garnished before.

The Little Boy Book, by Helen Hay, pictures by Frank Ver Beck. The full-page illustrations in colours of this volume are among the cleverest and happiest we have seen in any gift-book this season. Humorous many of them are; in others there is an inventiveness, a weirdness, very impressive; and in others considerable beauty. The verses have the right ring of lines intended for children. 'The Little Boy Book' is a treasure.

Proverbs Improved, in twenty-four coloured pictures, by Grace A. May, with verses written round them by Frederic Chapman. This extremely dainty book is so pleasing in every way that those who see it will find it hard to resist the appeal on the cover :—

Aunts, uncles, fathers, mothers, stay !
Useless to plead depleted purses ;
For Pictured Proverbs Pay ! Pay ! Pay !
We make a present of the verses.

Which is generous, for the verses are neat and pithy. The pictures are little gems of design and colour.

Britons and Boers, verses by Herbert Ives, pictures by Scotson Clark, illustrated. The praises of Tommy and the Handy Man are sung vigorously, compliments are poured on our generals, and contempt on the Boers in this well-decorated little volume. Some of the lines might appear to some lacking in good taste, but there can be no doubt of their patriotism. The sentiment is unmistakable—here is a portion of its expression :—

He's the monarch of the earth,
As a fighter ; from his birth
He's respected as The British Fighting-Man.

There are scores of lines in a similar strain.

Mother Goose Cooked, by John H. Myrtle and Reginald Rigby. A whimsical collection of old jingles perverted to something very different from their original meaning—made modern, so to speak. Here, for instance, is an old favourite with a new face :

Sing a song of ninepence,
Learn it off by heart,
Five-and-thirty 'shop eggs'
Cooked in a tart ;
When they took the crust off
The birds began to sing :
Wasn't that a silly dish
To give a saucy king ?

Accompanying these lines is a laughable picture of the king holding his nose as the contents of the 'shop eggs' begin to chirp. Another runs :

Little Jack Cornet
Was rude to a hornet
That lived in a nest close by ;
He put out his tongue,
And now he's been stung
On the nose, and the mouth, and the eye.

The designs are coloured, and are immensely funny. The book is decidedly an acquisition for the children.

Mr. JOHN LONG.

Glimpses from Wonderland, by John Ingold, with five illustrations by A. Ba[illegible]. The five stories in this volume charm the reader by their inventiveness, their fine workmanship, their magic as artistically wrought pieces of imagination. The real and the unreal, the past and the present, are curiously intertwined, and through all their fancifulness there runs a virile feeling. 'The Necromancer' is the most characteristic of the tales—the story of the learned Clamator, who could transfer the spark of life from one body to another, imparting to one being the experience of age and the fire of youth, and of what he did for Phantas and Magoria is a strong piece of work, and humour is one of its ingredients. There is originality in 'Glimpses from Wonderland.' The illustrations are notable for their quality.

Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

The Story of Dr. Pusey's Life, by the author of 'Charles Lowder.' There was room for a 'personal' memoir of the great High Church leader as distinguished from the monumental work by Dr. Liddon, which is the record of Pusey's public activity. In that book little was said of his private life, in accordance with the wish of his only surviving child. This embargo has been removed in the present case ; in fact, the 'story' has been written at her request, and the bulk of the material for it supplied by her.

The volume, therefore, does not in any way supersede Liddon's great biography, but may be regarded as 'a kind of handmaid' to it, to use the author's words —it gives Pusey from the personal point of view. It should be warmly received by all to whom Pusey's memory is dear, or who are interested in the important work he did for the Church of England. The author writes, of course, as a follower of Pusey. He writes with felicity, with enthusiasm, tempered by discretion, and he succeeds in putting before us a very human picture of Pusey. From the first Pusey wished to become a clergyman, and his education was pursued to this end. From Oxford he went to Göttingen to learn Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, and Chaldee, in order to qualify himself for dealing with the problems of the Old Testament. Here he worked more than fourteen hours a day. His studies convinced him of the genuineness of the Book of Daniel. In 1828 he married the lady whom he had met eleven years before. His letters to her before marriage are curious effusions, heavy and dull, marked by that want of style that was one of Pusey's greatest drawbacks, and that lack of humour that was perhaps his greatest. Soon after his marriage he was appointed Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, was ordained, and he and his wife took up the residence at Christ Church which was his for nearly fifty-three years. Of his friends, Newman, Keble, and others, of the famous Tractarian movement, with its momentous consequences, nothing need be said here. They are touched upon admirably in the 'story.' Three children were born to Pusey, one, a girl, died young, another, a son, also died early. Very pathetic and touching does this only son appear. A brave, gentle soul, who, when he saw that his infirmities prevented him from being a clergyman, as he desired, said that his only wish then was to do what he might be able for God's service at any time and in any way. Notwithstanding the loss of these children, and of his devoted wife, Pusey, suffering keenly, went forward with his work, narrow, perhaps, but always courageous, always generous, always humble—a saint if there ever was one. Even those who hold views very different from Dr. Pusey's will find stimulus and inspiration in the contemplation of his kindly unselfish life.

The Autobiography of a Tramp, by J. H. Crawford, with illustrations. George Borrow would have greeted Mr. Crawford as a brother, by virtue of this 'Autobiography of a Tramp.' In this daring attempt to depict the tramp in all his raggedness and ruggedness, there is a curious blend of the grimly realistic and unabashed sentiment. Dick, the father, who knows the woods and fields and rivers, and them that move therein, with an intimate knowledge, is little more than a savage made cunning by the struggle to live. His wife, to whom home is the bank of a hedge, shaded by a tree, is excellently delineated. Pathetically ignorant, yet longing that her son should be able to read even a little of the ample page of knowledge: patient, suffering cold and hunger and neglect without murmur; loving with all the strength of her nature her husband and her son. This son, also named Dick, tells the story, which commences with his birth in a stackyard, the snow falling upon the wretched mother and child. Five brothers and sisters had been born under conditions very much the same, and they had all perished. The boy grows up, and is initiated by his father into the mysteries known only to 'the children of the open air'—the hardships of the road, the delights of a freedom bounded only by the spectre of hunger that is never far off. Dick, junior, has his romance, and Kelpie is her name. The book is unique in its portrayal of tramp life; it is written with sympathy and insight; and stands out as probably the most truly original work the year has seen. It has for frontispiece a photogravure reproduction of Fred. Walker's picture, 'The Vagrants,' and is further illustrated by several photographic 'impressions.'

OTHER TRAMPS. From The Autobiography of a Tramp

Sport and Travel East and West, by Frederick Courteney Selous, illustrated. Mr. Selous's laurels as a mighty hunter have, of course, been won in Africa, where his name is one to conjure with among many more tribes than we would care to remember. But, eager for fresh worlds to conquer, he has turned his back on the scenes of his glory occasionally. This handsome volume, profusely illustrated with photographs of persons, places, and trophies of his prowess, contains the record of his adventures in the 'fresh woods and pastures new'—to wit, in Turkey, Asia Minor, and the Rocky Mountains. Wild goats, red deer, grey stags, and eagle's eggs were his prey in the East; mule deer, wapiti, lynxes, prong-horned antelope, and white-tailed deer in the West. Excessive heat and equally trying cold were endured by Mr. Selous, but beyond these he seems to have had a somewhat monotonous time—one day, fair sport, another, none at all—and at best there was nothing very exciting or noteworthy. We prefer Mr. Selous in Africa, where the game is not only worth the candle, but also Mr. Selous's attention, remembering that he is not as other hunters are.

The Baroness de Bode, 1775-1803, by William S. Childe-Pemberton, with portraits. Outwardly, this is an extremely sumptuous volume, an adornment to any library. The four photogravure portraits and other illustrations it contains add to its comeliness. More than this, the book has a distinct historical value. The Englishwoman who married a German baron had experiences that fall to few women. The Baron de Bode, though a German, was a soldier in the French King's service. Mary Kynnersley, daughter of a Staffordshire squire, married him in 1775. He was poor, but, from family connections and associations, on a good footing with many 'people of importance in their day.' The Baroness lost no time in cultivating their acquaintance. Children came; and princely and ducal godfathers and godmothers were procured for each, in the hope that they would 'do something' for the infants. The Baroness made quite an art of this sponsor business. On the birth of one of her children it was suggested that a certain potent personage should be asked to officiate in the usual way; but, as her stock of other noble friends was not yet exhausted, she declined—he should be kept in reserve for a like but later occasion! Through much dunning and petitioning, the fief of Soultz, in Alsace, was conferred upon the Baron, who paid eight thousand guineas, procured from friends, for the privilege. This was in 1788; and the Baroness was overjoyed at the success of all her efforts. This fief was one of the last relics of French feudalism. The people were practically serfs; the Baron held their lives at his disposal; they were bound to render him certain service, pay certain dues, and work for nothing. The Baroness refers with pride to her 'subjects,' and hints at the title of Count which her husband probably has a right to bear. At the height of their happiness the Revolution breaks out, and they are ruined. The people—who, curiously enough, had previously shown a disinclination to labour without pay—address the Baron and Baroness as citoyen and citoyenne, to the latter's indignation, and proceeded to make free with their property. They pray for the advent of the foreign troops. Soon matters become too warm for the 'aristocrats.' The Baron, gallant soldier as he is, decamps, leaving his wife and young children to follow, if they can. He is speedily followed by her, with some of her family. In their place of safety over the frontier, they wonder if the others have been killed. When the Allies have been defeated and all hopes of saving their estate are dashed to the ground, the indefatigable Baroness—to whom her husband left everything—travels to Russia with her son, and, thanks to her friends, travels very comfortably and at no expense to herself. At St. Petersburg she immediately becomes intimate with the circle that surrounded the Empress Catherine II., runs after everyone likely to be of service to her, and succeeds eventually in obtaining the gift of estates in Southern Russia. Subsequently she obtains a pension for herself, after her husband's death. A strange light this volume throws upon the manners and ideas of the time, and one far from pleasant. These De Bodes were always waiting for something to turn up, always looking to others to provide for them; and there was nothing too sordid for them, if only it put money in their pocket and helped to maintain their position 'in Society.'

Pike and Perch, by William Senior ('Redspinner'), with chapters by 'John Bickerdyke' and W. H. Pope. Cookery, by Alexander Innes Shand. Illustrated by George Roller, and from photographs. This is the latest volume in the 'Fur, Feather, and Fin' series, edited by Mr. A. E. T. Watson, and, like its predecessors, is as complete as expert knowledge and experience of the best kind can make it. No higher authorities than the writers of this book could be found. They write in no dry, technical manner, but clearly, concisely, and pleasantly. The mysteries of trolling, spinning, paternostering, and ledgering, and other secrets are explained; we have chapters on the history of pike and perch; their habits and their habitations; and having caught our fish, we are initiated into the art of cooking them. Accounts of personal adventures while in pursuit of them enliven the book; and though they are 'fish stories,' we believe them. No fisherman can afford to be without this volume.

Autumns in Argyleshire, with Rod and Gun, by the Hon. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy, with illustrations by Archibald Thorburn. Mr. Gathorne-Hardy's volume is a capital addition to the literature of sport. It consists of pictures from his life as a sportsman in the West Highlands, in which favoured region he has had the fortune to spend every autumn since 1867. His first acquaintance with Scotland began then, when he visited the beautiful property of Mr. (now Lord) Malcolm of Poltalloch. He met with most of his experiences in this sportsman's paradise. Mr. Gathorne-Hardy writes modestly, but very agreeably, with the good humour and temper that are always found in those accustomed to moor and river, to open contact with Nature. In his narratives of deer stalking, seal hunting, roe chasing, grouse driving, salmon fishing, and the other delights that were the Fates' boon to him, he has many an amusing story to tell, many anecdotes to relate; and he charms us with his kindliness of manner, his enjoyment of his sport, his gusto. Undoubtedly this is a volume sportsmen must have on their shelves. It will bring back to them the glory of days that are gone, and inspire eagerness for those that are to come. Mr. Thorburn's pictures are most beautiful; few sporting books have been so decorated.

JUST TEN POUNDS. From Pike and Perch

Ian Hamilton's March, by Winston Spencer Churchill, together with Extracts from the Diary of Lieutenant H. Frankland, a Prisoner of War at Pretoria, with portrait, maps, and plans. Of the books that have been and will be written upon and about the South African war, Mr. Churchill's will probably stand out among the most prominent, those with the greatest likelihood of permanency. His 'London to Ladysmith viâ Pretoria' was a brilliant performance, entrancing as a mere book of adventure, valuable as the work of one who was a keen observer, who came to his task with knowledge and understanding. He wrote as free from prejudice as could a man in his position ; he helped to a realisation of the Boer as something very different from the music-hall version of him. That book was made up of letters contributed by Mr. Churchill to the Morning Post as its war correspondent ; and so is the present volume, the articles being lengthened and corrected, and four additional letters being included. The chief event with which it deals is the march of Lieutenant-General Ian Hamilton's column on the flank of Lord Roberts's main army from Bloemfontein to Pretoria. This force encountered and overcame the brunt of the Boer resistance, marched, far from the railway, more than four hundred miles through the enemy's country, fought ten general actions and fourteen smaller actions, and captured five towns. It was Mr. Churchill's cousin, the Duke of Marlborough, captain on Ian Hamilton's staff, to whom Pretoria surrendered on June 5. The entry later on of Lord Roberts and his army is a lively bit of description. The movements of Ian Hamilton, culminating so splendidly, were not known so well as they should have been, as no newspaper correspondent accompanied the force continuously. But Mr. Churchill's narrative makes ample amends. It is to the full as fascinating as its predecessor ; as freshly, brilliantly written, with the happy knack of making plain to the ordinary citizen the complications of military tactics. The affair of Heilbron, when a Boer convoy was captured, to take only one instance, is as vividly, as illuminatingly described as such a thing could be. No words are wasted ; but the incident is pictured once and for all on the mind. Very interesting reading is afforded by the extracts from Lieutenant Frankland's diary. He was a prisoner at Pretoria from November 19 to June 5 last. Mr. Churchill was a fellow-prisoner at one time, but, as we all know, he was more fortunate than the other captives and soon escaped. The hopes and fears, the vain attempts at escape, the suspense and monotony, that made up existence at Pretoria, are described very quietly, but the effect upon the reader is unmistakable. The portrait of Ian Hamilton is after the picture of Mr. Sargent.

The Successors of Drake, by Julian S. Corbett, with portraits and other illustrations. This magnificent work, with its four portraits, and twelve maps and plans, is the sequel to Mr. Corbett's 'Drake and the Tudor Navy,' and covers the period of hostilities with Spain which extended from the death of Drake, in 1596, to the conclusion of the war at the accession of James I. Mr. Corbett is at issue with Seeley's view that the period between the defeat of the first Armada and the death of Elizabeth was one in which war was waged freely, with a triumphant sense of power, with scarcely any sense of danger, by a generation that had grown up to revel in victory. Mr. Corbett maintains that this view is not borne out by the history of the times. During these fifteen years the Spanish navy was founded, there was a new Armada off Ushant ; Spanish naval stations were established from end to end of the Channel ; Ireland was invaded ; English cruising squadrons were again and again driven off their ground by superior force. The Cadiz exploit was a great victory for England ; but the following years saw two Spanish Armadas despatched against her, and but for the Dutch a third would have sailed. The Spanish trade routes never got under the command of the English navy to the war's end. It was really a period of 'splendid failures' caused by an ignorance of the interdependence of army and navy. It is, therefore, well worth study to day. The great lesson taught is the limitation of maritime power. The power had been gained, but the expected results did not appear, and Queen Elizabeth and her Government could not understand the reason. Mr. Corbett explains, and describes the 'splendid failures,' the causes that made them so ; and, holding that the real importance of maritime power is its influence on military operations, writes not only the naval history, but the military history of the time. We are thus enabled to see why, despite the efficiency of the navy, the war went on so long. It is a story that none of us can read without a thrill.

Mr. Corbett's book is indispensable to a correct knowledge of the great events with which it deals. He puts us right on many things, and among them are the actions of Sir Walter Raleigh during the war. What he says on this point is a blow to the hero-worshipper.

The Golliwogg's Polar Adventures, pictures by Florence K. Upton, verses by Bertha Upton.

> You look astonished, Peg, my girl,
> To note our summer goal,
> But just as sure as you stand there,
> We'll find the great North Pole.

The Golliwogg thus announces his expedition, and the Dutch dolls, with the Midget, prepare to accompany him. They build their boat, and set forth merrily. But many dire mishaps, many woeful adventures, befall them ere they reach their destination. Pluck and resource, however, enable them to triumph over all their difficulties, and the Pole is discovered.

> Now sing with all your might !
> We've reached the axis of the earth,
> And find it snug and tight.

Thirty-one coloured plates depict their preparations, their voyaging, their awful troubles, and their final reward, and Miss Upton has never done anything more humorous than these pictures. The volume will be a joy for many a day in the nursery.

The Grey Fairy Book, edited by Andrew Lang, with numerous illustrations by H. J. Ford. Why 'Grey' is a question Mr. Lang only can answer; but the name, as Mr. Toots would remark, is of no consequence at all; we are grateful to Mr. Lang for such a beautiful and entrancing collection of fairy stories. They are derived from many countries, as he says—Lithuania, various parts of Africa, Germany, France, Greece, and other regions of the world. There are thirty-five of them, and each is a treasure. We cannot praise one more than the others; they must be read, and they will all yield satisfaction and delight. Happy children for whom this feast is prepared! Lovely stories and equally lovely pictures; a binding that is refreshing to the eye—what better present could they desire?

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., Limited.

Burma, by Max and Bertha Ferrars. In this handsome volume the life and scenery of Burma are brought vividly before English readers. The country during a long period of its existence remained in isolation, partly on account of its geographical position, which prevented its coming under the influence of other nations, and partly because it possessed no staples of trade to encourage enterprise of any kind. From the peculiar nature of its civilisation, therefore, it exhibits features which have long since ceased to distinguish any other portion of the globe. It is, for instance, one of the strongholds of Buddhism, for, as the authors point out, 'the seven millions of Burma, and perhaps a twentieth of that number in Ceylon, together with the half-million Jains of India, are the practical Buddhists of the world. With the rest the profession has sunk to an empty name, as in China or Japan, or it is lax, as in Siam, or it is utterly transformed, as in Tibet.' Burma may, in short, be said to present characteristics of religion, native custom, trades and professions, warfare, &c., possessed by no other nation, and in this way it may be understood how interesting a detailed description of the country and its inhabitants must be. The authors have in the first place grouped their remarks under the headings of childhood, adolescence, and manhood, treating of the various customs or occupations suitable to these ages, such as games, school routine, religious teaching, trades, &c. They then go on to speak of the alien races, methods of administration, pageants and frolics, funeral observances, and so forth. In several appendices interesting information is afforded in regard to the chronology of Burma, the structure of the Burmese language, Burmese music, the population, imports and exports, and the nature of the crimes principally committed. But it must be admitted that the greatest attraction of the volume lies in the illustrations, of which there are four hundred and fifty, all being produced with the utmost delicacy and finish ; and in this respect much praise is due to the Swan Engraving Company, who have prepared the blocks from the photographs. The book is one of the most sumptuous art works of the year.

Fifty Masterpieces of Anthony Van Dyck, in photogravure, selected from the pictures exhibited at Antwerp in 1899, described and historically explained, with a sketch of the life of the artist, by Max Rooses. Edited under the protection of the Committee of the Exhibition, translated by Fanny Knowles. This monumental memento of the great exhibition of Van Dyck's pictures at Antwerp last year is a superlatively beautiful work—it is the gift-book of the season. Nothing finer has issued from the press. The fifty masterpieces are absolutely perfect in their reproduction, while the text of Mr. Rooses gives all the necessary particulars of each picture, and the biography is a thoroughly competent piece of work. This resplendent volume will be the envy of collectors. Its ample proportions, rich margins, and unique binding form a fitting shrine for the gems it encloses.

Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century, with biographical notices, edited by Max Rooses, translated by F. Knowles. With six etchings by Ph. Zilcken, six photogravure plates, and over two hundred other illustrations. That the great art traditions of Holland are still vigorous this splendid volume attests to the full. If by any chance the Dutch painters, some of whose works are reproduced here, are not known to art lovers in England, they can have no more worthy introduction than is afforded by Mr. Rooses, while those who are already acquainted with them will feel grateful for this magnificent tribute to genius. The masters included are Anton Mauve, Mrs. Bilders-Van Bosse, Hendrik Valkenburg, Philip Lodervijk, Jacob Frederik Sadee, F. P. Ter Meulen, W. B. Tholen, David Adolphe Constant Artz, Fredericus Jacobus Van Rossum Du Chattel, Jan Vrolijk, Gerke Henkes, W. C. Nakken, and Pieter de Josselin de Jong. Of each a biography is given, in which his or her works are described. The illustrations are among the finest that have ever been produced in England. Zilcken's etching of Mrs. Bilders-Van Bosse's 'The Forester's Cottage,' the photogravure 'Making up to Mother,' after Valkenburg, and the photogravure 'The Philosopher,' after Henkes, may be mentioned as specimens of exquisitely reproduced work. The type is large, the page large, with wide margins, and the covers are a model of taste. What a magnificent gift-book !

THE POOR OF THE VILLAGE. (
From Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century

All the World's Fighting Ships, Cosmopolitan Naval Annual, 1900, by Fred. T. Jane. Published for the Naval Syndicate. 3rd year of issue. Mr. Jane's compilation has taken its place as an indispensable adjunct to a complete knowledge of the navies of the world—it is the 'Whitaker' of its subject. In this year's issue there are several improvements. Directly reproduced photographs have been substituted for the former pen-and-ink drawings of ships of importance ; for ships of lesser importance silhouettes have been adopted. The number of plans has been greatly augmented. A silhouette index of the principal 'liners' and merchant vessels has been added. All war-ships are divided into two general groups—'armoured ships,' i.e. ships with armour on both belt and guns ; and 'cruisers,' ships which have not got armour on both. Mr. Jane's book is thus made more valuable than ever, and we are enabled to make a rapid comparison between the navies of the different countries, and the differences that exist between any one vessel and another.

Shadowings, by Lafcadio Hearn, Lecturer on English Literature in the Imperial University, Tōkyō, Japan. Lovers of 'queer stories' should find ample gratification in this volume, which, besides, introduces them to a literature full of charm and interest, practically unknown to Europeans. Japanese art we are fairly familiar with, but we cannot understand the strange, fascinating race that bids fair to become, after centuries of obscurity, one of the world's great powers unless we know something of their songs, ballads, and stories. Mr. Hearn, in his 'Ghostly Japan' and other works, has been a pioneer in this direction, and he adds considerably to our sense of obligation by 'Shadowings,' which gives us translations of characteristic Japanese tales and poems. The general reader will delight in them; to the student they suggest new fields of thought and investigation. Some of these Japanese stories have a curious resemblance to those that have been current in Europe for generations. Yet they are taken from old Japanese sources; they were not introduced into Japan through European literature. They are eerie, mysterious, highly imaginative and poetic. One of them, 'The Screen-Maiden,' is the story of Pygmalion over again, only in the Japanese story it is a picture, not a statue, that comes to life through the great love of a scholar. The maiden and her lover pledge themselves to each other 'for the time of seven existences.' Better even than this is 'The Reconciliation.' Because he thought he would prosper better, a young Samurai divorced his wife and married again. But his second wife was not as the first; he began to think of the love he had lost, he saw the deserted wife kneeling alone in her desolate little room, 'veiling her tears with her poor worn sleeve.' After some years he returns; she welcomes him joyfully, a new life opens before him. He sleeps; in the morning he bends over the corpse of his wife, long dead. In addition to the stories, Mr. Hearn translates a number of wonderful songs, some of them from the antique drama, which are a revelation to the Western mind; and treats interestingly of Japanese female names. Apart from these Japanese studies, there are some curious papers on dreams and Gothic architecture which will well repay perusal. The volume, which contains pictures taken from Japanese books, is a fascinating one, and should be read by all interested in the peoples and thoughts of the mystic East.

Chess Strategetics Illustrated, Military Art and Science adapted to the Chessboard, by Franklin K. Young. Among devotees of chess Mr. Young is celebrated for what it is no exaggeration to term his astonishing contributions to the literature of the game. By his 'Minor Tactics,' 'Major Tactics,' and 'Grand Tactics' of Chess—better known in America, their birthplace, than in England—he practically created a new epoch in chess. They adapted to the great game the laws and principles that govern military science. The aim was to put chess on a philosophical basis, to apply the rules of elementary geometry to the chessboard; and, given the position of the kings on the board, the player who had mastered the theory would know the rightful places of the other pieces. The theory illustrates the ideas upon which the greatest masters played. The present volume teaches how to combine the processes of the art of 'chess play' with the formulas of the science of chess; and the military idea, as it may be called, is in evidence all through. In the appendix the battle of Waterloo is 'played,' and a fascinating study it is. The book contains many diagrams that should greatly assist the student, and it is a most handsome and presentable volume. Every chess-player should possess it.

SHEEP NEAR THE RIVER. From Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century

Famous Novels of the Sea, with many illustrations. Six more representative stories of the sea than those included in this series could hardly be named. Well 'got up,' beautifully illustrated, they form a collection that cannot be surpassed for fascination, for the diversity of sea life that they picture, for their marvellous human interest. Cooper's 'Two Admirals,' Marryat's 'Midshipman Easy,' Michael Scott's 'Tom Cringle's Log,' Cupples' 'The Green Hand,' Melville's 'Moby Dick,' and Clark Russell's 'Wreck of the "Grosvenor,"' are a library of the sea in themselves. They show us life in the navy, in the merchant service, in the whaler, in all seas and oceans, in peace and war; they take us among pirates, mutineers, salts of the old school; we are fighting with the French, or battling with the storm, or fuming in a calm, eager for the adventures that lie before us. We are face to face with the mystery of the sea; with the terrible, horrible, haunting; with the comic, pathetic, and beautiful, and mysterious. We encounter the heroisms, the oddities, the cruelties, the endurance and cheerful patience that the sea teaches and stamps upon men. All phases of life and character are met with. These are the books for Britons, for all who love the sea; their equals cannot be found in the literature of any other nation in the world.

From Lepcha Land

Lepcha Land, or Six Weeks in the Sikhim Himalayas, by Florence Donaldson, with a map showing route, and 106 illustrations. Mrs. Donaldson describes her travels in 1891 in the Sikhim Himalayas as a prolonged picnic, but there are few who will agree with her after reading this admirable account of her adventures. The country she, with her husband, traversed lies in the Eastern Himalayas, and is the buffer State between us and Chinese Tibet. The Lepchas, the original inhabitants of Sikhim, are a gentle, peace-loving people who have been repeatedly conquered by the surrounding hill tribes. Their ancient patriarchal customs are dying out; once free and independent, they are now the poorest people in that part of the country, and from them the coolie class is drawn. Mrs. Donaldson gives us many glimpses into their lives and habits which are deeply interesting. Their country contains some of the finest scenery in the world and the highest mountains; and great are the natural difficulties of the traveller in these terrible altitudes, where the cold is as severe as in the Arctic regions. Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson set out from Calcutta with light hearts, however, and went undaunted through the hardships they encountered in their journey as far as Tibet they, 'just for the fun of the thing,' crossed over the forbidden boundary of Tibet itself. It was a wonderful feat of endurance, which entitles Mrs. Donaldson to a high place among women travellers. The trip may be said to have commenced at Kalimpong, which is a busy trade depôt about four thousand feet above the sea-level. When they got to Lingtu, not very far away, they were 12,617 feet above sea-level. They arrived at Gnatong, where a fort guards our frontier and keeps watch on the Grand Lama of Lhassa. It is the most elevated fortified place in the world, and is completely isolated in the midst of awe-inspiring, snow-covered mountains. Here the travellers were attacked by 'mountain sickness,' supposed to be caused by the rarified air. They set off from Gnatong for the Jeylap Pass, which, some fifteen thousand feet high, forms the natural boundary between Sikhim and Tibet. Soon after, their hardships threatened to end in a fatal way. They had scaled a rocky, barren hill, were beyond the fuel limit, and snow began to fall. They knew nothing of the way, but, not being able to go further, they put up their tent, their servants sheltered under a rock, and they waited for the morning. Then they had a descent of six thousand feet in seven or eight miles before them, the snow thick on the ground, and the road almost without a level spot. It was hours before the awful stillness and solitude of Tiphu and Lake Tanitso, where these incidents happened, were exchanged for the comparative luxury of Guntok, the residence of the Rajah of Sikhim. We must refer our readers to this entrancing book itself if they would learn all of its brave author's adventures ; they will find it one of the finest books published of late years. Photographs taken by Mrs. Donaldson and her husband embellish the volume.

CWM ELAN. From An Old Man's Holidays [Photo. by Roberts

An Old Man's Holidays, by The Amateur Angler. It is late in the day to praise 'The Amateur Angler's' love of the open air for its own sake, or his gift of bringing scenes of grandeur or loveliness vividly before the reader. The sweet breath of meadows and the murmur of rivers as well as of winds lend charm to all he writes, and that charm is certainly not less in 'An Old Man's Holidays' than in 'Days in Dovedale' or 'By Meadow and Stream.' The book opens with a note of sadness. The author enjoyed the enviable fortune of numbering among his friends Mr. R. D. Blackmore and Mr. William Black, who have recently passed one in ripe old age, the other, alas ! still in his prime. Their memory and that of other old friends is gracefully commemorated, so that, as we have said, the opening note is sad. But the sadness speedily vanishes ; the high spirits of the angler recover themselves, and thenceforward all is light and bright and attractive. The volume tells of fishing expeditions on the Itchen, in South Wales, and in Cornwall, varied with reminiscence, anecdote, and sketches of scenery. It has the prime merit of taking the reader out of doors, now into bracing wind and rain, now into summer heat, and again into genial spring or autumn warmth and softness. Moreover, we share the writer's glow and excitement when a big fish is hooked. That is the charm of the book, that whatever the author happens to be doing the reader also does in imagination. The style is remarkably easy and buoyant. Angling evidently keeps a man young, for, despite the title of the book, there is no trace whatever of age, either in manner or matter—with the exception of the prefatory note already mentioned. In a word, 'The Amateur Angler' has written a book not merely for anglers but also for Nature-lovers. The little volume is daintily produced and handsomely illustrated.

The Story of the War in South Africa, 1899 1900, by Captain A. T. Mahan, U.S.N., with map and portrait of the author. Captain Mahan has made the best contribution to the literature of the war in South Africa that has yet been published. Into the rights or wrongs of the war he does not enter ; he writes as a critic of the operations that took place, watching and noting the various moves and countermoves as impartially as an umpire in a chess match. The contest is absorbingly interesting to him as an object-lesson in the art of war. Why we failed in certain positions, why the Boers failed in others, and what were the causes that made success for us ultimately certain—causes, some of them, that go beyond the present campaign, to the racial differences between the two peoples at issue—Captain Mahan discusses with abundant knowledge and perspicuity. He inclines to the opinion that the plan originally laid down of a march upon Bloemfontein, which was abandoned by General Buller and subsequently acted upon by Lord Roberts, was the best plan that could have been adopted; but he explains the reasons which decided Buller to concentrate his energies in Natal. The Boers were, at the beginning of hostilities, superior in numbers; and they were helped by the nature of the country. But they procrastinated; they had not the 'exclusiveness of purpose' that Napoleon spoke of, and so did 'not concentrate in force upon a single military objective.' Nor 'was such choice of object as they made dictated by sound military principle, or carried out with sound military judgment.' Joubert summed up in himself the qualities of his race. His idea was to act ever on the defensive, to make war without running the risk of military failure—there was, of course, no question of Joubert's personal bravery—to consider the preservation of his own forces more important than the destruction of the enemy. These were some of the reasons why the Boers failed at Ladysmith, Kimberley, and Mafeking. Their always keeping one eye on their means of retreat, never venturing to win or lose all by a great coup, was fatal to them in the end. They looked to the 'attainment of results not by superior dexterity in the use of means, but by subtlety and ambush.' They had not the 'courage that throws away the scabbard, much less which burns its ships.' They are hunters, trappers, bringing their artifices into the battle-field, and there could be no doubt of the final result, whatever success was attained in the interval. Captain Mahan contrasts the headlong bravery of the British officer, who so often exposes himself and his men, careless of danger if his end is attained. He has been reproached for this quality—but Captain Mahan asks, Where has it placed Great Britain among the nations of the earth? This valuable book demands careful attention, and therefore we trust it will be widely read.

Golden Tips, a Description of Ceylon and its great Tea Industry, by Henry W. Cave, M.A., F.R.G.S., illustrated from photographs by the author. There are few things more wonderful in the history of our colonial possessions than the amazing development of the tea industry of Ceylon. A field was planted in Rawbodde in 1842, but the commencement of tea cultivation on business lines can be said to date from the eighties, when the coffee failures compelled the planters to seek other means of making a living. Since then tea has become the island's greatest product, over 370,000 acres being under cultivation. The Ceylon varieties are ousting the pekoes and souchongs of other countries, and they are a considerable item in the world's commerce. This success has aroused general interest in Ceylon, and to satisfy the thirst for information Mr. Cave has written this book, glowing in covers of white and gold. He describes the tea centres, the methods of tea cultivation, the other products of the island, the people and their work, the general features of the island, and its buildings and institutions. There are over two hundred pictures, so placed that they can be seen with the text to which they refer. 'Golden Tips' is an invaluable book of reference for everything that concerns Ceylon.

THE SHADOW OF ADAM'S PEAK. From Golden Tips

The Will of an Eccentric, by Jules Verne. The pen of the veteran Jules Verne has not lost its cunning in this engrossing narrative. An extraordinary story he tells, which carries the absorbed reader on from start to finish. It opens in Chicago, where there is an Eccentric Club, of which William J. Hypperbone, multi-millionaire, is the principal member. In his life he has done nothing eccentric; he determines to be worthy of the club after his death. He has been inordinately fond of the great Goose Game, played with dice and a board marked in a certain way. By his will, the United States become the board on which the game is played by six chosen persons, the winner of which is entitled to his vast fortune. Under a codicil, another competitor is added, name unknown, and the amazing game is pursued amid the wonder-stricken attention of America's millions. Who wins and what happens to Hypperbone need not be revealed here. An amazing story, of interest second to none that we owe to the brilliant romancer. There is a profusion of good illustrations to the text.

Mr. ELKIN MATHEWS.

Sketches and Skits, by Arthur Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins enjoys an assured position as one of our cleverest artists in black-and-white, and his work has enhanced the value of many a book issued during these latter years. A volume of his sketches is therefore particularly welcome, and we are sure this handsome, good-sized publication will be widely popular. The pictures are full-page. They possess all the freshness of feeling, power in expressing character, skill in details, appreciation of the ridiculous, and carefulness of drawing that we associate with his work. 'Social Rise of the Country Barber' is one of the most amusing, both in picture and comment. The young lady whose hair he is dressing remarks that he must know everyone in the neighbourhood. 'I do, Miss, and I'm working my way into the very best circles. Only to-day I cut the curate.'

The Rabbit Book, by Charles Pettafor. Bunnie is seen in this volume in many phases of civilised life—as a pruner of roses, a chess-player, a billiard-player, to name a few. In all he is most whimsically drawn, and his doings also, chronicled in smooth-flowing verses, will cause huge merriment in the nursery.

Titania, and other Poems, by Arthur Shearly Cripps. Mr. Cripps writes with true poetic feeling, and his poems are well worthy their resurrection from the various publications in which they first appeared. Love of man and Nature, sympathy, tenderness, sonorousness, a deep religious feeling, mystic sometimes in expression, and a solemn beauty in many of his lines, are the marks of this volume. There is much that is quotable in it; let us give, though not as the best piece in the book, this sonnet on 'Schools of Poetry':

> Phœbus, high-priest of narrow cults of song,
> I love you not so well as simple Pan,
> Who learns his cadences where west winds fan
> The yellowing reeds, his notes most sweet and long
> From nesting nightingales, and schools a throng
> Of singing shepherds, bidding every man
> Sing when his heart shall bid, the best he can,
> As birds whose artlessness does Art no wrong!
> O happy England of Elizabeth!
> Verses as roses clambering every bower!
> And every lover breathing lyric breath!
> Your woods that rang then now are dumb as death,
> A few tame bullfinch bards in cages cower,
> And whistle praises of Art's wintry power!

Christmas Eve at Romney Hall, written and illustrated from pencil drawings by Jessie Macgregor. The talented author of this book, who can use the pen of poet and the pencil of the artist with equal felicity and skill, has provided a charming gift for Christmas.

> A broken spinet silent fills
> A nook in Romney Hall;
> For years no hand has touched its keys
> Nor lit its tapers tall:

Dust lies where dainty fingers played
For those who danced sedately,
Who paced the mazy minuet,
With measured steps and stately.

Little Christopher is the last of the ancient race that Romney Hall had sheltered. He ponders over their history, learns their stories, the past becomes as real as the present, and the old nursery tales also haunt his imagination; fact, fable, and memory all encounter in a moonlit land of dreams. The drawings are exquisite.

From The April Baby's Book of Tunes

The Tale of the Little Twin Dragons, by S. Rosamond Praeger. Sent out into the world by their father, the twins, accompanied by an imp, travel in search of a young prince who has mysteriously disappeared, and they soon come upon a knavish merman, who has turned people into little babies because they doubted his existence. The captives are restored to their proper ages by command of the dragons, and the merman sent to the Court of the queen who is the mother of the prince. But one of the babies is overlooked, and the twins have a heap of trouble with him and undergo many tribulations on his behalf. Who he is, and what happens to the twins, need not be revealed. All is very laughably recounted in this pretty book, which has lots of pictures – in colours and in black-and-white – that will send the nursery into shouts of enjoyment.

The Adventures of Herr Baby, by Mrs Molesworth, illustrated by Walter Crane. Since 'Herr Baby' appeared in 1881, the book has been reprinted many times, and caused laughter and tears and tender feeling in thousands of homes. Here is a pretty new edition, adorned with some of Mr. Crane's most graceful work in black-and-white; and so this favourite sets forth again a candidate for the suffrages of the children, and we expect it will easily out-distance its rivals, dangerous competitors as many of them are.

A Noah's Ark Geography, by Mabel Dearmer, illustrated. Here is presented a true account of the travels and adventures of Kit, Jum-Jum, and the Cockyolly Bird, faithfully set forth and pictured by Mrs. Dearmer. They are very wonderful—nay, startling—adventures, and very happily are they recounted. The coloured illustrations are as good as the incidents they adorn, and the book is one that should be in every nursery. In every way—binding, printing, pictures, and story—it challenges comparison with any child's gift-book published this season.

The April Baby's Book of Tunes, with the Story of how they came to be Written, by the author of 'Elizabeth and her German Garden,' illustrated by Kate Greenaway. Author and artist combine to make this one of the most entrancing of children's books published for a long while. The three German babies, April, May, and June, for whom their mother makes the tunes, are delightful little creatures, and their engaging ways will highly amuse the small ones of England. They are very eager for the songs and keep their mother very busy; but then we have the benefit of their success in coaxing so many from her, for they are all shown in this book with the music. Miss Greenaway's pictures, printed in colours, are as pretty as any she ever drew, and that is saying a great deal.

Beasts, Thumb-Nail Studies in Pets, by Wardlaw Kennedy, illustrated. It was to be expected that Mr.

Kennedy's book on pets should be welcomed by the public. This new edition, added to by the author, and fully illustrated, is one that we should like to see in the hands of the young of all classes. The work is based on actual observation, actual experience of the creatures it describes, and a wonderful amount of information is given under cover of a nimble and facetious style that raises many a laugh. Mr. Kennedy is so much in love with his pets, and writes so warmly about them, that the reading of 'Beasts' will of a surety inspire boys and girls, and even grown-up people, to get pets of their own, and it is this stirring and encouraging of the love for animals that is one of the chief charms of the volume.

The House that Grew, by Mrs. Molesworth, illustrated by Alice B. Woodward. One of Mrs. Molesworth's typical books for girls—typical in that no one but Mrs. Molesworth could have written it, and that it has all the qualities that have made her writings so deservedly popular. 'The House that Grew' is the story of the Lanark family upon whom misfortune fell. They were compelled to let their pretty house in the country, and a bathing-hut on the shore had to be fashioned into a dwelling-place. Eventually this unique establishment was extended by the addition of a covered waggonette brought by a girl cousin, and a tent, the property of a schoolboy who joined them during his holidays. They all, despite their difficulties, managed to live very happily; the children regarded the affair as an enjoyable picnic. The shadow of misfortune passed away, leaving the memory in their minds of a very joyous experience. The tale is one of Mrs. Molesworth's best. It is very prettily and spiritedly illustrated.

The Last of the Mohicans, by J. Fenimore Cooper, with illustrations by H. M. Brock, and an Introduction by Mowbray Morris. This edition of an old favourite, and one of the classics of American literature, belongs to that excellent series the 'Illustrated Standard Novels,' and in size, 'get-up,' and general appearance should warmly commend itself to the book-lover. Mr. Brock's talents as an illustrator are displayed to great advantage in the many pictures strewn throughout the volume. Mr. Mowbray Morris's introduction is a very sane and serviceable piece of criticism, which, while pointing out Cooper's deficiencies in some of the novelist's arts, rightly insists upon those qualities in which he stands pre-eminent—qualities it is the fashion to ignore and neglect. 'The Last of the Mohicans' owed its birth to a suggestion of the Lord Derby who was subsequently three times Prime Minister of England, while travelling with Cooper and Mr. Wortley, afterwards Lord Wharncliffe, in 1825, in the regions of Lakes George and Champlain. The party halted on their return at Glenn's Falls, where the Hudson leaps sixty feet down in thunder and foam. The beauty and grandeur were striking. Mysterious caverns echoed to the roar of the waters. The suggestion here made that an Indian romance should be written with the place as its scene captivated Cooper, and 'The Last of the Mohicans' was soon written, to take its place as the finest of Indian tales.

The Deerslayer is also issued in the same series as 'The Last of the Mohicans,' the same artist supplying it with its many illustrations. 'The Deerslayer' was preferred by Fenimore Cooper himself to 'The Last of the Mohicans,' and an interesting study in comparison is afforded to the reader of the two books.

Messrs. METHUEN & CO.

To their charming 'Little Library' series Messrs. Methuen have added The Early Poems of Tennyson, with notes and an introduction by Mr. Churton Collins, and a portrait from a painting by S. Lawrence; and Maud, and other Poems, by Tennyson, with notes and an introduction by Elizabeth Wordsworth, and a frontispiece by W. E. F. Britten. The two volumes are altogether delightful in appearance and convenient for the pocket, both as to size and price. Mr. Churton Collins's volume is a reprint of the 'Poems by Alfred Tennyson' which first appeared in their present form in 1842. Edward FitzGerald held that in these poems Tennyson reached his high-water mark, and there is some warrant for this contention when we see they include 'Œnone,' 'Morte D'Arthur,' 'Break, break, break,' 'Saint Agnes,' 'Locksley Hall,' 'The Lotos Eaters,' 'The Vision of Sin,' 'Ulysses,' 'The Palace of Art,'

'The Gardener's Daughter,' 'A Dream of Fair Women,' and 'The Sisters,' to name only a few. Mr. Collins traces briefly the outlines of Tennyson's life, and his notes are always to the purpose. 'Maud, and other Poems,' includes the 'Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington,' and the editor's contribution is adequate and sensible.

Phillis Seymour, by H. C. N., with portrait. The biography of one who gave her life to evangelistic work among the poor, both young and old, in London and different parts of the country. The record of this devoted servant of her fellow-creatures should be in the libraries of all Sunday schools, where her brief life should prove an incentive to work like hers.

The Home Messenger, a Magazine for the People, 1900. Edited by Frederick A. Atkins. Illustrated. This miscellany appeals to all classes of readers; it is replete with elevating fiction, papers and addresses on subjects that touch our well-being very closely, poetry, &c. The children have special pages all to themselves. This model magazine counts among its contributors Sir Walter Besant, who writes a valuable article on books for boys, Dr. Horton, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Adeline Sergeant, Ian Maclaren, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. J. H. Jowett, Mr. Howard Evans, Mr. Carvell Williams, Agnes Giberne, Phyllis Browne, Rev. Arnold Thomas, and others of equal repute and prominence. An interesting series of articles is that entitled 'A Group of Free Church Laymen,' wherein the lives and work of representative men like Mr. Perks, M.P., Mr. Albert Spicer, Sir G. B. Bruce, Mr. George Cadbury, Mr. Evan Spicer, Mr. Horace B. Marshall, Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P., and Mr. W. P. Hartley are succinctly recorded. Another instructive series is on the 'Duties of Church Members.' Ian Maclaren writes on 'The Meanest Thing a Man can Do'; the serial is by Adeline Sergeant; Dr. Barrett tells 'The Story of our Favourite Hymns'; Rev. J. H. Greenhough has six papers on 'Christianity and Home Life.' This by no means exhausts the attractions of the Home Messenger, which further boasts a host of illustrations, including a frontispiece, 'Gordon's Monument in St. Paul's,' specially drawn for it by Mr. Arthur Garratt.

The Young Woman, 1900, conducted by Frederick A. Atkins. This excellently conducted periodical contains a great assortment of stories, serviceable articles, and special contributions appealing particularly to girls. Jane Barlow, Hulda Friederichs, Sarah Grand, L. T. Meade, Katherine Tynan, and Mary E. Wilkins are among the contributors to a volume that may be read with genuine pleasure.

Pandita Ramabai, the Story of her Life, by Helen S. Dyer. Mrs. Dyer writes with personal knowledge of the illustrious Hindu lady whose work for her Indian sisters has been so remarkable. A moving story Mrs. Dyer tells—one of the romances of the mission field. Pandita Ramabai's father was a learned man, firm in his adherence to his religious belief, but with ideas as to the education of women regarded with dismay and contempt by the friends of the old Brahmin scholar. So he took his second wife into the forest, educated her there, and there his daughter was born. She also was educated, and at twelve could repeat by heart eighteen thousand verses from the 'Puranas.' A time of terrible suffering came upon the family during the famine of 1876-77, and her father and mother died practically from hunger, after long wanderings. These stern experiences turned the girl's thoughts to the work to which, after a brief married life, she devoted herself altogether. It was while she was in England, studying the English language, that she was converted to the Christian faith. After a tour in America, she opened the school at Poona for high-caste widows, which developed so amazingly into the social and industrial organisation which has brought life and hope and moral elevation to so many Indian women. It is truly a wonderful work for one woman to achieve, and this sympathetic account of it should find a place in many an English home. The book contains a multitude of portraits and pictures.

A Losing Game, and other Readings, being the annual volume of the Herald of Mercy and the Revival. Parable and story, and plenty of good illustrations and portraits, make up a volume the purpose of which is to inculcate the precepts of Christianity in a simple, sincere manner. Sunday-school teachers will find much in the book that will be helpful to them in their work.

Scrambles amongst the Alps in the Years 1860-69, by Edward Whymper. Fifth edition. Among the books which are mostly found in the library of all mountain climbers, Mr. Whymper's 'Scrambles amongst the Alps' holds an honoured place. It is interesting to recall the history of the book. The first edition was published exactly twenty-nine years ago, and a second edition followed immediately. That lasted for eight years, when a third, somewhat condensed, appeared. Strange to relate, the work was then allowed to remain out of print for twelve years. In 1893 came a fourth edition, the matter omitted from the third being restored; and now comes the fifth, to which not only mountaineers, but all lovers of outdoor literature will extend a cordial welcome. The excellently produced illustrations add materially to the attractions of the volume.

Raggylug, the Cottontail Rabbit, and other Animal Stories, by Ernest Seton-Thompson, with pictures by the author. These stories are selected for children from the author's well-known 'Wild Animals I have Known,' and no more captivating book on the subject could be put into their hands. They are founded on intimate knowledge, patient and loving investigation, and have all the zest and charm of romance. If we shudder at the sight of Nature 'red in tooth and claw,' we can also rejoice in the pictures of the rare courage and devotion of animals. No wild animal dies of old age, Mr. Seton-Thompson says. Sooner or later a tragic fate overtakes it. How close and terrible is the struggle to live these dramatic stories reveal. Cleverness, unceasing vigilance, enabled Molly, the rabbit, to protect herself and her son, Raggylug, from their numerous, never-resting foes for a long time; and she teaches him all the tricks of self-preservation she has learned from her own trying experience. The final tragedy of poor Molly affected us as with the sense of a personal loss. A fine story, too, is that of Lobo, the great grey wolf that for years ravaged Currumpaw, a cattle range in northern New Mexico. His cunning, sagacity, and daring are scarcely credible. He is secured at last, but it was his affection for his mate that brought about his destruction. The love of Vixen, the fox, for her hapless cub, caught in a trap, has something almost human in it. Mr. Seton-Thompson tells his story in a masterly style. The illustrations have an educational as well as artistic value.

Shakespeare's Greenwood, by George Morley. The gratitude of all lovers of ancient things should be given to Mr. Morley for this book, which, dainty in appearance, well printed and illustrated, is a pleasure to handle. Mr. Morley's work as a delineator of Warwickshire rustic life is widely appreciated. He has left story-telling for the nonce, and now describes the customs, language, superstitions, folk-lore, birds and trees, the parson, the poets and novelists, of the county of Shakespeare, George Eliot, and Savage Landor. A most delightful book he has produced. It is refreshing to know that habits and customs and manners of speech that have their roots far in the past have not been altogether

'improved' from among us. In Warwickshire there is still in vogue the form of speech used in Shakespeare's day; the same idioms, pronunciation, and the same methods of spelling. Mr. Morley quotes many words, such as 'on,' 'mortal,' 'moil,' 'shive,' 'keck,' 'shog,' which to-day have the same signification as in Shakespeare's time, and were used by him as the peasant uses them now. A curious chapter is that on superstitions. As late as 1875 it was believed that there were sixteen witches in the village of Long Compton; and James Heywood killed an old woman, firmly believing she was one of them. The belief in witchcraft is still strong. Ghosts are also firmly believed in. Strange and some beautiful customs yet retain their hold upon the people. Chief of these are the ceremonies observed at Christmas. On Christmas Eve, for instance, the peasants still assemble in their gardens at the stroke of midnight 'to hear the bees sing their Christmas carols.' They believe that the bees rejoice as much in Christmas Day as human beings, and so sing Christmas in. The animals are glad, also; in the early dawn of Christmas morn the horses, cows, and sheep kneel towards the East in reverence for the day. Mr. Morley has much to tell us of the folk-lore of Warwickshire which is very extensive and profoundly interesting. But enough has perhaps been said to show that his book is certainly one that should not be missed—it is entrancing from the first page to the last.

The Making of a Missionary, or Daydreams in Earnest, by Charlotte M. Yonge, with five full-page illustrations by W. S. Stacey. A story of mission work in China for children. Edward Bryant, Aline, and Mabel, when young, long to go forth into strange countries and preach the Gospel. The time comes when their dreams are realised, when they go out to join Archdeacon Goodrich and his band of missionaries who are working in North China. While Edward and Aline are away from their station on a journey it is attacked by Boxers, and Mabel, the young, impulsive, generous-hearted enthusiast, is killed as she tries to save the little Chinese children she was teaching. Coming from Miss Yonge's pen there is no necessity to say that the story is well written.

A Story of Ancient Wales, by H. Elrington. A stirring tale of the struggle of Caractacus against the power of Rome, in which Martius, a Roman general, takes part. Martius has a son, Caradoc, who is maimed, and by the Roman law the boy may be left to perish, as he cannot use a sword. But Caradoc is carried off by David, a British slave boy in the house of Martius, and so saved from the villainy of Hamil, a false servant of the Roman general's. The two boys in their wanderings in the hills of Wales are befriended by Owen, a native Christian. Martius and his wife are also, secretly, Christians. Ultimately Caradoc is restored to his parents, and David is restored to his position as a British chief. Owen is a picturesque character, and the author has taken more pains than are usual in books of this kind in depicting him. Owen had known and loved the arts, the luxury of Rome, and he was naturally selfish; but he gives up all his nature craves for to preach the Gospel to the people of his own country. Mr. W. S. Stacey contributes two full-page illustrations.

Jonathan Toms, by A. V. Dutton, with two full-page illustrations by C. I. Staniland. We cordially recommend this book to all readers in search of a smart, brightly written story. It brims over with good spirits and humour, and has a crispness of style that is very pleasing. It is the story of a mistake made by Maisie Palliser when she, with her parents, is holiday-making in Switzerland and Austria. They fall in with a traveller, whose name is given as Jonathan Toms. Maisie, misunderstanding what he says of himself, thinks he is a provision dealer, perhaps a grocer's assistant, or a clerk, and poor. They become, however, great friends, and he at last wins her consent to become his wife. Then she discovers who and what he really is. The conversations are well done; the characters have life and vitality.

Bab's Baby, and other Stories, by Katherine E. Vernham, with two full-page illustrations by Gertrude D. Hammond. Short stories of humble life in great cities, touched with much grace and tender feeling. 'About Three Friends' is the longest and best. Ned, who befriends Aleck, the starving, homeless orphan, is a day-labourer; but he has a heart of gold, and very affecting is the friendship between him and the little fellow. Aleck grows up something of a prig, but Ned rings true all his life, and it is a pleasure to make his acquaintance. The third friend is Jim, who is only a dog, but a dog of parts, and he is as true in his way as his master Ned. These stories, all conveying a lesson, are very suitable for children.

Keepers of England, a Story of a Thousand Years Ago, by Mary H. Debenham, with five full-page illustrations by Gertrude D. Hammond. A good story, which takes us to the stirring times of the great King Alfred. The King is beset with dangers from traitors at home, and the ravaging Norsemen from Scandinavia and Denmark. The characters are well drawn—particularly those of the King; Conan, the scholar, singer, and healer of the sick, accused of dealings with the Evil One by the traitor Sexwulf; and Edburga, wife of the Thegn of Woodbourne, which is indeed delineated with much charm and delicacy. The story moves brightly along. Miss Hammond's illustrations are excellent.

From "The Fortunes of Peggy Treherne"

The Fortunes of Peggy Treherne, by Annette Lyster, with three full-page illustrations by W. S. Stacey. Peggy was a workhouse child who became a servant, and was so happy in the service of Kate Singleton and her brother that she cried bitterly when a hitherto unknown uncle swooped down upon her and made her his heiress. But she managed to reconcile herself to abandoning poverty and enjoying her very satisfactory income. She was sent to be educated by a prim old maid, whose nieces made much of Peggy, and whose worthless nephew declared himself violently in love with her. It was discovered, however, that he was an Anarchist, even a Free-thinker, and cared more for Peggy's money than for her. So their engagement was broken off. Peggy had other experiences much pleasanter, and Miss Lyster narrates them all in a manner that should please the girls to whom this interesting book is given at Christmas time. Mr. Stacey's illustrations are distinctly good.

Messrs. THOMAS NELSON & SONS.

Ye Mariners of England, a Boy's Book of the Navy, by Herbert Hayens, with numerous illustrations. A right brave and manly book Mr. Hayens has written. Boys—and men as well—will feel their blood flowing faster, their eyes sparkling as they read this well written story of our Navy. The splendid narrative is set forth without attempt at adornment; the incidents are concisely related, and left to make their own impression. When a boy has gone through the volume he will have the rich possession of what is probably the most heroic story in the world in his mind, and it must not surprise those who are in authority over him should he manifest an unappeasable hankering for the sea. Mr. Hayens starts at the beginning. It will surprise many to learn that it was not until the infamous King John's time that our naval history can be really said to have begun. In 1213 an English fleet, commanded by his half-brother, set sail for the first time with the deliberate intention of destroying a hostile navy, to prevent an invasion of our country. The ships of this and succeeding centuries are described; then we come to the time of Drake, and the Armada, and the immortal fight of the 'Revenge.' The achievements of Blake and Monk are recounted, and after several chapters devoted to Benbow, Rooke, Byng, Vernon, Boscawen, Rodney, and other famous commanders, we come to the most glorious period of British naval history—the era of which Nelson is the hero. Naturally a large portion of the book is given to this. Afterwards the story is continued to the present time. The evolution from wooden walls to ironclads, the introduction of torpedoes, submarine boats, and the consequent changes in the conditions of naval warfare, are succinctly told. Thus valuable information is combined with thrilling stories of gallantry and battle. The pictures show the navy from its earliest days to the present, a photograph of the 'Powerful' being the frontispiece. Parents can place no book in their boys' hands more likely to please them than this.

Craddles, by Alice Knight. 'Craddles' is the name of a fisher boy who lives in the village of Seathwaite, on the Devon coast. Years before he had been washed ashore during a gale, the sole survivor from the wreck of a ship coming from America. Three school chums arrive in Seathwaite for a holiday, and in 'Craddles's' company they search all the smugglers' caves and mysterious subways that are so plentiful. During one of their expeditions they overhear a plot to rob the house of Mr. Roper, a rich old gentleman, and make up their minds to frustrate it. How they do so, and how their action leads to the identification of 'Craddles,' Miss Knight tells us very gracefully and prettily, and her book should be liked by boys. Most tasteful are the many pictures that ornament the volume.

From Red, White, and Green

A Little Ray of Sunshine, by Jennie Chappell. 'Mousie,' a little girl, is the 'ray of sunshine,' whose kindness and thoughtfulness for others endear her to everyone. Through her instrumentality her big brother Archie is cleared of a charge of stealing some valuable jewels which another boy had stolen and hidden in a garden. 'Mousie' is a bright, happy little woman, and this story about her will be much appreciated by other little women—and, maybe, they will learn something of advantage to themselves from it.

Life of General Charles Gordon, by M. B. Synge. This compilation is creditably done, and should be secure of a place in Sunday school libraries. Boys will welcome it as a gift-book. The author has gone to all the available sources of information, and in a hundred and twenty-seven pages has sketched in an interesting way the life-work of Gordon as man, soldier, administrator, and as the finest hero-Christian our age has seen. There are portraits and various pictures in the volume.

Ships and Havens, by Henry Van Dyke. A choice little book of essays on character, and the aims men set before them. The title-page is resplendent with black letter and a picture of a ship printed in red, in which colour are the head lines and many of the quotations from well-known poets. A strong, sensible book, wherein are treated such questions as Whither Bound? The Haven of Work, Pleasure, Work, Fame, the Force of the Ideal, Day Dreams, the Last Port, and the Passion of Immortality, Duty, Honour, and Religion—old, yet ever new subjects; and the author, in a straightforward yet gentle manner, deals with them freshly and earnestly. A book young men should be the better for.

Red, White, and Green, by Herbert Hayens. Mr. Hayens takes us back to 1848, the year of revolutions, and to the glorious attempt of the Hungarians to throw off the yoke of Austria. The author's heart is in his work, which is excellently contrived, and full of the exploits that make the pulse beat swiftly. The brothers Stephen and George Botskay—the elder only seventeen—leave London to aid Hungary, and on their way find themselves in Vienna, in the midst of the insurrection. They save the Baroness von Arnstein and her daughter Theresa from the fury of the mob, and by so doing incur the hatred of Captain von Theyer. Stephen, when they arrive in Hungary, is appointed on the staff of Arthur Görgei, the famous Hungarian general; George becomes a lieutenant of Honveds. Adventures follow rapidly; the hopes of the Hungarians rise high as they fight their way to liberty, to be stopped just as victory seemed in their grasp by the Russian troops that came to Austria's help. Stephen had fallen while storming a fortress; George is hunted like a criminal, being pursued relentlessly by Von Theyer, and narrowly escapes the shameful death his enemy has planned for him. Much pleasure will boys obtain in the reading of this romance, which conveys at the same time a large amount of information about a 'lost cause' that, in those far-off years, aroused the warmest sympathy of Englishmen. The book is handsomely illustrated.

A Toast Fag, and other Stories, by Harold Avery, with two illustrations. A collection of very exhilarating school stories, by one who knows boys and their devious ways thoroughly. The tone is healthy, but the youngsters are represented as we know them to be, not paragons of virtue, but high-spirited, mischievous, and, some of them, priggish and mean. These last, however, find no tolerance from their chums. Little Jim Pascoe is the 'toast fag,' and he becomes quite an expert in preparing toast for Calvert, the great football hero, to whom Jim looks up with all the adoration of boyish enthusiasm. Jim gets Calvert out of a bad scrape, and the two become fast friends. The other stories are as good, particularly 'The Enchanted Bat.' Wholesome in tendency, and full of the good things that boys delight in, 'A Toast Fag' should be very much sought after.

A Life on the Ocean Wave. A fund of information will be gathered by children from this book of ships—men-of-war, ocean 'greyhounds,' sailing ships, and boats of all kinds, all splendidly illustrated in colours, and explained in notes adapted to children. Patriotic verses are included, and they have a swing and verve that the little ones will enjoy.

From After Worcester

One of Buller's Horse, a Tale of the Zulu Campaign, by William Johnston. South Africa is the scene, and war the theme, of Mr. Johnston's latest book. But he leaves the present campaign to others; his subject is the struggle that culminated in the destruction of Cetewayo's power. But before we reach the fatal battle of Ulundi we learn about the careers of John Gordon, William Fraser, Jim William, and Tom Burgoyne, all of whom join the army, though for very different reasons. The blight of disgrace hangs upon Gordon; he has been accused and sentenced for a crime which Burgoyne knows he never committed. Gordon is 'One of Buller's Horse,' and he goes through the terrible fights that marked the Zulu king's last effort to crush the European with distinguished bravery, and wins his commission. But the cloud remains, and so long as it does he cannot rejoice in his success, or, what is worse, go back to his father in Scotland. All, however, comes right in the end. An engrossing story, told with a verve and dash that should cause boys to warm to it. There are a number of illustrations, which are very good.

After Worcester, the Story of a Royal Fugitive, by E. Everett-Green, with illustrations. The story of Worcester field, and the attempts of Charles II. to escape, after the defeat, from the Roundheads, has all the elements of romance and excitement, and is, of course, one of the most picturesque incidents in English history. The author of this beautifully got-up volume has not failed to take advantage of the capital opportunity the subject presents to the novelist, and 'After Worcester' should prove one of the successes of the season. We see Charles in a more favourable light than is perhaps justified by strict veracity—we find him grateful, kind-hearted, considerate. He may have meant to exercise all these qualities; and certainly the devotion which enabled him to escape to France should have called them forth. A very heartening romance is 'After Worcester'; right good heroes are Basil Coningsby and Upton Coghill; the heroines, Jane Lane and Juliana Coningsby, are not a whit behind them.

Adventurers All, a Tale of the Philippine Islands in War Time, by K. M. Eady, with illustrations. Evan Williams, an orphan of sixteen, loathed the task of quill-driving in Singapore, to which fate, after his father's death at Malacca, had reduced him, and accepted with alacrity the offer of Captain Hemingway to accompany him on a perilous expedition to the Philippines. He found himself, when he came aboard the 'Annabel Lee,' associated with about the vilest crew that ever scuttled ship or cut a throat—every man had left his country for his country's good. The ship had a cargo destined for the islands, but the difficulties of evading the Spaniards were great. The war with America was commencing, and so the blockade had to be run. Startling are the adventures the ship and her crew meet with—mutiny, treachery, fighting, and breathless 'scapes by sea and land are part of Evan's experience. The story is narrated with vigour, and the time spent in reading it is pleasantly occupied.

The Romance of the South Pole, Antarctic Voyages and Explorations, by G. Barnett Smith. Mr. Barnett Smith has written this informing volume in view of the probability that a British expedition to the Antarctic Seas will soon be sent out. Less attention has been paid to researches in the South Polar regions than to those in the north, with which the names of Franklin, Ross, Nansen, and others are for ever associated. A sketch of what has been accomplished as regards Antarctic navigation is therefore timely. Mr. Barnett Smith has produced a capital little book, which treats of the early explorations, Captain Cook's voyages, Weddell's explorations, the discoveries of Ross, the American expedition, the 'Challenger' explorations, the Dundee Antarctic expedi tion, 1892 to 1893, and other voyages; and he discusses the latest exploration proposals. His exposition of his fascinating subject is most lucid, and his book should do much to remove the reproach that we neglect the southern regions in favour of the north. The book has several illustrations.

A Terrible Feud, and other Stories for Children, by E. Velvin and E. L. Haverfield, with thirteen illustrations. A collection of seven tales inculcating the virtue and happiness of kindness, truthfulness, self-sacrifice, and good temper, illustrated by examples that are worth so much more than precept. For very young children these stories, agreeably written—though their moral is too apparent now and then—pleasantly diversified as to incident, and adorned with pleasing pictures, should be beneficial.

Rhoda, a Tale for Girls, by E. L. Haverfield. Just the book for girls is 'Rhoda.' It relates the fortunes of five girls, who at their father's death find themselves reduced from affluence to a total income that formerly they spent apiece as pin-money. They go into the world, leaving all their friends ignorant of their whereabouts; and try various means of earning money. And they have a wonderful servant, a typical London girl, to help them in the little house they take in London. Added to the narration of their trials and misfortunes are the various love stories that at first are so inauspicious, but later on change into—but we must say no more, except to recommend this charming book to all parents as one their daughters will be delighted to possess. There are several very good illustrations.

Up the Creeks, a Tale of Adventure in West Africa, by Edward Shirley, with illustrations. A spirited recital of a young agent's adventures at a factory far up the Bonny River on the West African coast. Young Trentham's dangers commence as soon as he starts for his distant station. A hippopotamus takes a slice out of his boat, and would have capsized it if he had not killed her with a couple of revolver shots. But he is in greater danger from the native chief London Pride, who attacks the factory, and after a determined resistance by Trentham and a devoted native 'boy,' succeeds in taking it, and carries the defenders to his village some miles off. Other adventures follow here. An exciting narrative well written.

My Lady Marcia, a Story of the French Revolution, by Eliza F. Pollard, with illustrations. One of the chief merits of 'My Lady Marcia' is its fairness to both sides in the awful upheaval that convulsed France a little more than a century ago. The horrors of the time are limned with a sure hand, but the Republicans are not all monsters, nor the Royalists all paragons of virtue and bravery. Some of the causes that produced the Revolution are revealed—the oppression of the people, their wretched state, and the heavy burdens of taxation that fell upon them alone, the clergy and the nobles going free. The book is, therefore, a very good one to put into the hands of young people; it gives both sides of the case—which is something to be grateful for, as few historical questions have been more distorted by partisanship than the French Revolution. As a story 'My Lady Marcia' is a considerable success; the full tragedy of the Terror is brought out, and we follow with strained intensity the fortunes of Lady Marcia, the young English girl, and her friends, who meet with such strange adventures and more than once so narrowly escape the guillotine. Many stories have been written about the Revolution: for boys and girls we know of few better than 'My Lady Marcia.' They will find that Marcia is a girl of true heroic mould.

From Rhoda: a Tale for Girls

Gunpowder, Treason, and Plot, and other Stories for Boys, by Harold Avery, Fred. Whishaw, and R. B. Townshend, with fourteen illustrations. These seven stories are of the stuff that boys love, plenty of fun, excitement, daring, and adventure in them. They deal with the school, the sea, the desert, and the wilds of Russia, and are all smartly told. Boys are the heroes of them all, and they perform those wonderful feats that by some strange law it seems impossible the mere grown man can ever achieve.

From Heads or Tails.

Heads or Tails, the Story of a Friendship, by Harold Avery, with illustrations. Mr. Avery brings all the deft workmanship, the unflagging spirits, and knowledge of boys that make his works so enjoyable to bear upon this chronicle of Ruddingham College, wherein is depicted the friendship of Miller and 'young Pepper,' which lasted beyond their school days, and proved the salvation of 'Pepper' when he went out into the world. Mr. Avery has the gift not always apparent in the books of those who write for boys—the gift of 'actuality,' the sense of character, and the power to realise it in figures that have life in them. Consequently 'Heads or Tails' is a most entertaining narrative, which boys will like all the better because they will find themselves portrayed, not as monstrous utterers of platitudes that were ancient a thousand years back, but as they know themselves to be. A great gain to intellectual honesty is this. The story of 'Heads or Tails' need not be described at length. It contains much fun and frolic, with something that is almost tragical; and it is written throughout in a hearty, winning manner that should gain for it troops of readers. It is very neatly illustrated.

A Gordon Highlander, by E. Everett-Green, illustrated. The Gordon Highlander is little Gordon Carnegie, whose father, Captain Carnegie, was in that famous regiment. The Captain was ordered to South Africa, and impresses upon his small son how he must comport himself as the son of one fighting for his country, during his absence. Very hard is it sometimes for the little man to keep a stiff upper lip; particularly when he hears that his father is shut up in Ladysmith, and afterwards, when the Captain is reported as missing. But he comes through the ordeal with flying colours; and then the day arrives on which Captain Carnegie returns, invalided, but safe; and that happy day compensates for all the sorrow the motherless little 'Gordon Highlander' had suffered.

A Sister of the Red Cross, a Tale of the South African War, by Mrs. L. T. Meade. A pretty, touching story of selfishness overcome, of devotion to duty, of love that conquers everything. The scene is Ladysmith during the siege. Kitty Hepworth is a thoroughly selfish, vain, cowardly girl, and her love of dress gets her into a difficulty which Captain Gavon Keith overcomes by becoming engaged to her, and thus shielding her, though he loves her sister, the Red Cross nurse. Keith is hated by Major Strause, through whose enmity a serious accusation hangs over him. Strause wishes to marry the Red Cross sister, and if she will accept him his persecution of Keith will cease. The story is enacted during the horrors that befell the beleaguered town. At last Kitty's eyes are opened, and she does her duty, which leads to her sister's happiness, and Keith is vindicated. The illustrations to this first-rate story for girls are very artistic.

Baby's Picture Gallery. A dainty little book of coloured, beautiful pictures that the wee ones of the house will pore over again and again.

The Iron Horse. This volume, with its coloured covers, its excellent coloured pictures of railway engines, trains, and stations, and of incidents of railway travel, and the verses that describe all these, is just the kind of book the little ones will welcome.

Baby's Picture Book. Baby's eyes will glisten with glee when this book, full of colour and brightness, is placed in his or her hands. The eyes being feasted, the small mind can be instructed and widened as the meaning of the pictures is explained.

Nursery Rhymes Alphabet. Learning their letters will be a joy to the mites who get this pretty book, with its many coloured pictures that will make them laugh, and also help them to remember the mysteries of A, B, C.

The Farmer's Friends. Numerous illustrations of horses and cows, dogs, pigs, sheep, and fowls, all brightly coloured and well drawn, and described in easily remembered verse, make up a delightful present for little children.

In general excellence, beauty of illustration, and suitability for their readers few picture-books for children can equal those issued by Messrs. Nelson. We have before us The Dear Old Fairy Tales, containing 'Puss in Boots,' 'The Three Bears,' 'Little Red Riding Hood,' 'Blue Beard,' 'Jack and the Bean Stalk,' 'The Babes in the Wood,' 'The Sleeping Beauty.' Then there is The Red, White, and Blue, a book of the sea and of the different kinds of ships that sail upon it. Also By Rail, a picture-book about trains, from their departure from the great stations to their arrival in the country or the seaside. A Week at the Seaside contains the story of a holiday at a farmhouse, 'the nicest place in the world, I think.' Fairy Tales gives us the old favourites in verse in a way that children can readily learn. All these gift-books, strongly bound, are really marvels of colour; the pictures are of great artistic skill; we know of no books of their kind that are better. Messrs. Nelson also issue The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories, which is very tastefully got up, and provides a fund of good healthy entertainment for the very small ones.

In a Christmas Number attention may very appropriately be called to Messrs. Nelson's 'New Century Library,' which includes several of Dickens's novels, and will eventually include all Thackeray's and Scott's. The volumes already issued are admirably produced, and would make a delightful Christmas present.

The Thackeray issue is now nearly complete, and is having a very large sale, as indeed might be expected.

Messrs. W. P. NIMMO, HAY & MITCHELL.

Little Lady Prim, by E. M. Waterworth and Jennie Chappell, with a frontispiece. The moral of this little story for children is, do not allow them to become 'nesh,' as they say in the north. Annie Melville, called 'Little Lady Prim' on account of her old-fashioned manner, is a delicate little girl, who runs the danger of being over-nursed by all, from her mother downwards. Annie's uncle, a doctor, thinks it would be better for her to live for a while with some healthy children, and away she goes accordingly to the country. The very next day she gets lost in a wood, is kidnapped, and all sorts of unpleasant adventures befall her. But she is none the worse for them eventually.

Sandy's Secret, by Ascott R. Hope, with frontispiece. Mr. Hope's story is only a short one, but it is a very good one—well written, of course, and full of humour. To the Scotch village in which Sandy Veitch lives a Mr. Rutson has lately come. He is called the Pirate by the village children, because of his ferocious appearance and the knowledge that he had lived in the Fiji Islands. Leaving the schoolmaster one night, he is heard requesting him to keep a certain thing a 'dead secret.' It is Sandy who hears these words, and being a diligent reader of 'penny dreadfuls' he is not long in making up his mind that there is something mysterious and awful on foot. Sandy and his chum Alec Todd determine to prove it, and nearly lose their lives for their trouble. We will not betray the secret—the finding of it out will be a pleasure to all boys.

Cicely Frome, the Captain's Daughter, by Bessie Marchant, with four original illustrations. A capital story of the workings of conscience on a distracted mind. Captain Frome has the misfortune to lose his ship, with nearly all on board, and the inquiry into the affair proves that he was at fault. He never lets it be known that he was among the saved, but devotes himself to a life of expiation, seeking to save as many lives as were lost by his error. He assumes another name, goes to Ceylon, and, learning of the Mataganga and the dangers of its rotary current, he becomes a ferryman at this hazardous spot. He is the instrument of saving dozens of people from death by drowning. Cicely, his daughter, lives also in Ceylon, but she does not know her father. The last act of his conscience-tortured life is the saving of Cicely, and later on she knows who it is that sacrificed himself for her.

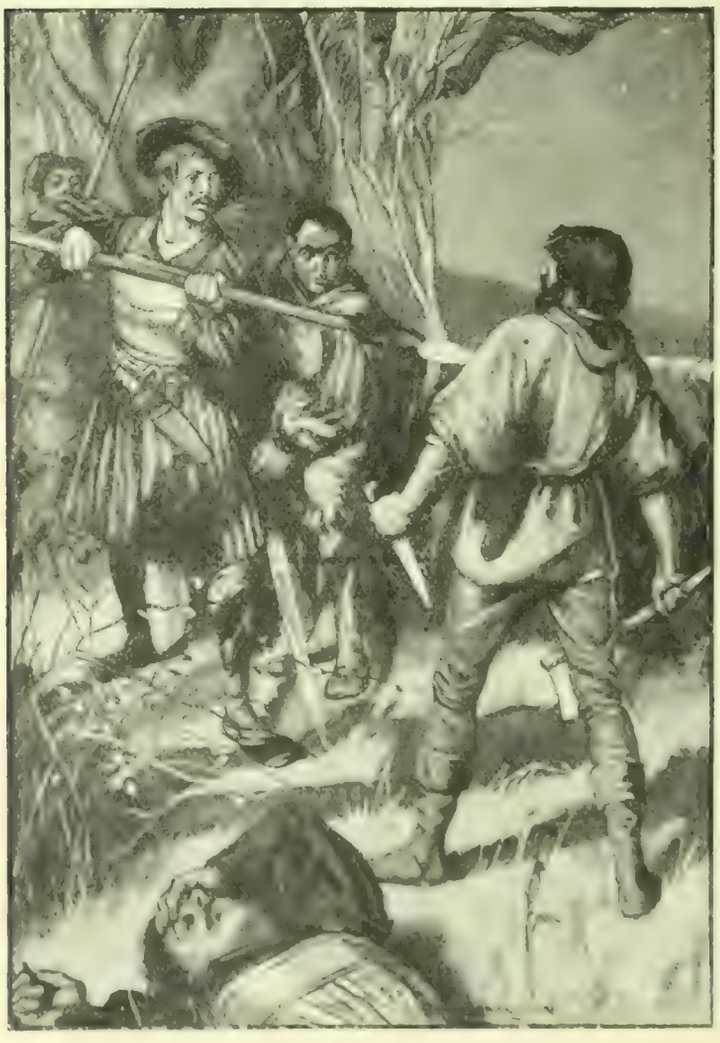
Juliet Stanley, or Silas Moggs' Pearl, by Penley Reyd, with a frontispiece. Juliet and her brother Robbie are the children of a strolling player. Their mother had died broken-hearted because her people had cast her off on her marriage with the handsome actor. When he dies also, Moggs, the 'Clown of Clowns,' comes to the rescue. He sends round the hat, and a home is found for the children in the house of a poor woman. Robbie obtains a situation, but being constantly taunted by the other boys with being the son of a circus tumbler, he runs away to sea. After a year he is discovered in a Calcutta hospital, just recovering from brain fever. He is brought home. Soon afterwards an advertisement for information about the children appears in a newspaper. Their troubles are at an end—a title and riches are theirs.

Lina's Fortune, by Emma Leslie, with a frontispiece. A story for children. Little Lina Adams suffered from hip disease, but she made herself happy by dressing dolls for the poor children in hospitals. Through this kindness of Lina's her mother is able to trace a lost sister, whose child is one of the patients to receive a doll. Lina's aunt is very poor—but fortune smiles just in time, and all is happiness.

Mr. ERNEST NISTER.

Lichtenstein, a Romance after the German of Wilhelm Hauff, adapted for English readers by L. L. Weedon, illustrated by T. H. Robinson. This romance takes us to Würtemberg in the year 1519, when all Germany was watching with intense anxiety and excitement the struggle between Ulrich of Würtemberg and the Suabian Union, a confederacy of princes, counts, and knights, and the free towns of Suabia and Franconia, which he had offended because of his refusal to join it. The book, which is dedicated to the Duchess of York—the then representative of the Teck family took part in the quarrel—is a first-rate specimen of its kind, alive with bustling action, with adventures, and daring deeds. Among the adherents of the Duke is George von Sturmfeder, a soldier of fortune, and it is around him and his vicissitudes that the story revolves. It opens out a period and a land little known to English readers. Its perusal will repay them—they will find in it all the qualities of a sterling romance. The volume is capitally 'got up,' and the illustrations are first-rate.



Old Gold, or the Cruise of the 'Jason' Brig, by Geo. Manville Fenn, illustrated by Stanley L. Wood. Mr. Fenn is a boys' favourite, as everyone knows, and a story from him needs no commendation. In 'Old Gold' he spins, with all his wonted cleverness, a characteristic yarn, the vivid interest of which commences with the first page. The two English gentlemen bargaining at Johnstown, Guiana, for the use of the brig 'Jason,' with which to go up the Amazon on an exploring expedition, soon have a taste of the adventures for which they yearn. First they meet the smart American, P. Franklyn Briscoe, who wishes to accompany them, to their great annoyance. They refuse, but Briscoe gets his way; and how he gets it is amusingly described. Up the Amazon, Indians and fights are everyday occurrences, but they sink into comparative insignificance beside the discovery of gold by Briscoe. Later on they come upon a deserted, mysterious city, and gold again in bushels. A lively story, bound to thrill the boys who read it, and it is illustrated very bountifully.

With Rupert the Brave, a Tale of the Civil War, by Sheila E. Braine, illustrated by E. Stuart Hardy. Very stirring and picturesque is 'With Rupert the Brave.' No more ardent worshippers had Prince Rupert than Chris Lovell and Dick Tropenell, and when they got the chance to join him in fighting for the King their joy was unbounded. Hairbreadth escapes, mighty fights, were henceforth their portion, and their leisur moments were devoted to the safe carrying of cipher letters and the unmasking of traitors. An interesting story, illustrated with a coloured frontispiece and many charming black-and-white pictures.

In Ælfred's Days, a Story of Saga the Dane, by Paul Creswick, illustrations by T. H. Robinson. As the hero of romance, King Ælfred, or Alfred as he is generally known, was probably never so in request as he is at present. Mr. Creswick has fallen captive to the fascination of this great figure, so powerfully impressed upon the English imagination; and has drawn a portrait of him that for vigour, dramatic strength, and insight, is among the best we have yet seen. He represents Alfred when still young. The story opens shortly before the battle of Ashdown, when the Danes were signally beaten, though at the cost of the life of Æthelred the king, to whom Alfred, his brother, succeeded. Before this decisive event, to which Alfred so materially contributed, he had rescued a tiny baby-boy—Saga the Dane. The youngster grew up as a Saxon, and not for long did he find out who he really was. The unravelling of the mystery is adroitly done, and in the process many exploits fall to Saga's share. We commend this book very strongly. It is beautifully illustrated, and should form a most attractive gift for boys.

From In Ælfred's Days

An Island Rose, by Rosamund Marriott Watson, illustrated by E. F. Skinner. This is another story of the great Civil War, and a very delicate and attractive pen does the writer wield. Mistress Letty Carlyon herself describes the quiet, happy time when she and her cousin, Everard Carlyon, and Humphrey Bromilow played together as children in the Isle of Wight. Then the storm broke, and the youths took opposite sides. Everard was a gay, reckless adherent of the king; Humphrey fought for Cromwell. Everard met his death in an attempt to carry off the Princess Elizabeth from Carisbrooke Castle, and Letty, who had agreed to help him, was enabled to escape only by the aid of Humphrey. Humphrey had his reward. This book should be very popular—it is excellently written, and exciting withal. And it is illustrated with many full-page and other illustrations, admirably done.

The Children's Wonderland, verses by H. M. Burnside, pen-and-ink illustrations by Florence Hardy. A volume to gladden the hearts of little children—a beautiful book, full of frolic and laughter. Miss Burnside's verses have the true ring that poetry for children should possess, and Miss Hardy's pictures are very funny and clever. A feature of the book is the transformation pictures, as they may be called. They are in rich colours, and by an ingenious arrangement each picture can be changed into another. The little ones will be enchanted with them.

The Time of Roses, by L. T. Meade, with illustrations by F. S. Wilson. Perhaps her aunt was to some degree responsible for the wicked conduct of Florence Aylmer. Florence was poor, her aunt rich, and the latter had promised to adopt her if she won a prize offered for the best essay at her school. Florence has her essay written for her by Bertha Keys, a pupil, clever but dishonest, and the essay wins the prize. Then Florence repents her deception, confesses, leaves the school in disgrace, and is soon almost starving in London. The dishonest Bertha has in the meantime become the aunt's companion, schemes for a will to be made in her favour, and endeavours to persuade Maurice Trevor, the aunt's adopted son, to marry her, and manages to keep Florence away from her aunt. But her nefarious conduct meets with its deserts, and poor Florence does not starve. Mrs. Meade is popular with girls, and they will like 'The Time of Roses.'

The Animals' Trip to Sea, described by Clifton Bingham, pictures by G. H. Thompson. This true and veracious history of the eventful voyage of the s.s. 'Crocodile' from Nowhere in particular to Anywhere in general is a highly diverting chronicle, which should make many a nursery resound with laughter. Immense preparations were made for the journey:

> The Elephant had himself measured for suits,
> The Giraffe bought collars, the Pig new boots;
> And Mrs. Hippo purchased a bonnet
> Just come from Paris, with ribbons on it.

The illustrations, coloured and in black-and-white, are a delight in themselves, so humorous and droll are they.

tispiece, and pen-and-ink illustrations by Lance Thackeray. Another historical romance; this time of the West country and the ill-fated Monmouth rebellion of 1685. Martin Merryweather sides with the Duke, and, after the defeat at Sedgmoor, is caught, and subsequently Judge Jeffreys sentences him to death. He waits for death in Taunton gaol, while, unknown to him and his wife, laid low with fever, their little daughter goes to London, and begs the Queen to save her father's life. Very prettily told is this story of a child's devotion; and very pretty are the pictures with which it is accompanied.

Dick of Temple Bar, by M. C. Rowsell, coloured frontispiece, and pen-and-ink illustrations by Lance Thackeray. Dick Trimlett was a boy in Child's Bank in Fleet Street, in the days of George II., when plots to restore the Stuarts were still being discovered by spies and informers. We meet with Pope and Bolingbroke. The latter loses some papers that Sir Nathan Verboggan, a notorious informer, and Dasher, his willing instrument, aver are treasonable; and thinking they are secreted in the bank the worthy couple break in. But they are outwitted by Dick; and all is put right. A bright little narrative, in which the period of the story is brought before the reader exceedingly well. The illustrations are good, and thoroughly in keeping with the book.

The Hermit of Hillside Tower, by Mrs. Isla Sitwell, with illustrations by E. Stuart Hardy. A merry story for children is this. The family of youngsters that go to the big house in Scotland for their holidays have a truly delightful time, and something of their pleasure will be imparted to those little ones to whom this tale is read, or who can read it for themselves. They will fall in love with the Hermit, for he might be a fairy—he does so many nice things that only fairies are supposed to do. The pictures will be liked, too; they are very clever.

Froissart in Britain, by Henry Newbold. With twenty-four illustrations from originals in the British Museum. It was a happy thought of the author of 'Admirals All' to follow up the volume of 'Stories from Froissart,' which he published last year, with this collection, dealing with England, from the same wonderful source. Froissart's Chronicles are, as he says, a history, an epic, a drama, a pageant, a picture gallery; and in this mirror of the past we see our own likeness, and learn of what manner of race we are. The daily life of our forefathers of five hundred years ago, their trade, wars, government, social divisions, the clothes they wore, the food they ate, are revealed to us in these fascinating records. In 'Froissart in Britain' we read of Edward III. and Robert the Bruce, of the Countess of Salisbury and the Order of the Garter, of the battles of Nevill's Cross and of Otterburn, of Wat Tyler, of Richard II. and his dethronement, and of many other things told in a brave, stirring, and, when occasion needs, touching way. And the quaint old-time pictures are a joy in themselves.

The Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, an Oxford Freshman, by Cuthbert Bede, B.A., with original illustrations by M. B. Hewerdine. To their 'Boys' Holiday Library' Messrs. Nisbet have added the 'Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green,' that irresistibly humorous picture of a 'freshman's' life. The edition is convenient as to size, shape, and cost, and should be very popular. Boys who have not read the book have a treat in store, those who have should read it again—for what more exhilarating book of its kind was ever written?

Messrs. GEORGE NEWNES, Limited.

The Shakespeare Country, illustrated by John Leyland. Of the making of books about Shakespeare and Shakespeare's country there is no end. The latest and one of the handsomest is this volume by John Leyland. Not much fresh material is now to be gleaned in Stratford-upon-Avon. Mr. Sidney Lee has gathered up in his exhaustive Life of Shakespeare whatever little store of authentic fact was missed by his predecessors. But Mr. Leyland retells in a pleasant style many of the main incidents and events in the poet's life, and the illustrations are a delight. It will be rather as an album of splendidly reproduced illustrations than as a work of literature that the volume will appeal to Shakespeareans. Here are 'views' of nearly all the principal buildings and scenes associated with the history of the past, and they could hardly be better presented. There are several views of Stratford, pictures of the birthplace—interior and exterior—the grammar school and guild chapel, the memorial group, Holy Trinity Church, inside and outside, Anne Hathaway's cottage, the home of Shakespeare's mother, Wilmcote, the Arden House, Wilmcote, Charlecote Hall, Warwick Castle, and half a hundred other places of interest; and all are so well done that the book is in the best sense a fine art work. The letterpress, too, is much above that of a guide-book. Mr. Leyland justly remarks that 'there is, perhaps, no English shire so filled with history as that of Warwick. Its stirring story could not but move the imagination of Shakespeare.' And he pictures, freshly and vividly, the growth of the greatest mind that has ever appeared among the sons of men. In his company we revisit the fragrant leafy lanes, and especially those lying between Stratford and Shottery, where the poet pursued his brief love romance. We found Mr. Leyland a capital guide and companion, and heartily commend his book. Not the least interesting part of an excellent work is the chapter on Shakespeare's portraits. A Shakespeare chronology is added, and there are indices to both the illustrations and the text.

THE MEMORIAL THEATRE, STRATFORD. From Shakespeare's Country

Khaki in South Africa, an album of pictures and photographs illustrating the chief events of the war under Lord Roberts, with a chronological history. Many books will be published dealing with the war, but few will equal this in appearance, or in its numerous illustrations. The summary, and the descriptions of the great events at the front which culminated in the downfall of the Dutch republics, are admirably and most lucidly written. A publication reflecting credit upon all concerned in its production.

China of To-day, or the Yellow Peril, edited by Commander Charles N. Robinson, R.N. This large handsome volume illustrates the principal places, incidents, and persons connected with the crisis in China, and consists of about 160 first-class photographs, in which every variety of the wondrous life of China is mirrored. A study of these pictures, to which concise notes and explanations are added, would teach the reader more of China than he could learn from the newspapers in a year. They enable us to understand something of the nature of the problem in China which has so terrible an interest for all civilised peoples.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

It was a happy idea on the part of the conductors of the Oxford University Press to bring out for Biblical students a Two Version Edition of the Bible. As the Bishop of Gloucester in a succinct preface remarks, the Revised Version in its first published form has hitherto been felt by the teacher to involve two very real difficulties. 'In the first place he did not find in the margin any reference to parallel or illustrative passages, nor even any indication, in the case of the numerous quotations in the New Testament from the Old Testament, of the book from which the quotation was made. This of course necessitated the use of a supplemental copy of the Authorised Version with the usual marginal references. The necessity of using two separate volumes, it may be confidently stated, was the reason why the use of the Revised Version was found to be so much less, in the case of teachers and general Bible-readers, than might naturally have been expected.' This first difficulty, after some lapse of time, has been completely removed by the publication, in May 1898, of the whole Revised Version. But the second difficulty still remained, 'viz. the necessity, in the case of the careful reader or teacher, of having two volumes before him, the Authorised Version and the Revised Version—the editions in parallel columns being as yet unprovided with the first requisite, marginal references. Even if the smallest of these editions were supplied with these references, not only would the volume be bulky, but a minor though a real difficulty would remain, viz. that the eye of the reader, in passing from one column to the other, would, especially in the New Testament, miss many of the smaller changes, on which occasionally much does really depend.' The edition, we learn, is due to the suggestion of Mr. Alfred F. Buxton. An explanatory key is given, and, almost needless to say, the volume is well produced, though unfortunately in our copy the binding is defective.

THE FOREST OF ARDEN. From [illegible] (Nelson)

An exceedingly welcome volume is The Oxford Book of English Verse, 1250-1900, chosen and edited by A. T. Quiller Couch. Mr. Couch states that he has tried to range over 'the whole field of English verse from the beginning, or from the thirteenth century to this closing year of the nineteenth, and to choose the best.' In an anthology the editor necessarily lays himself open to criticism on points of taste and insight; but on the whole Mr. Couch has done well. His book of course includes much that has appeared in other anthologies during recent years. 'The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics' led the way, and since its appearance there have been published many similar volumes, and especially and notably Mr. Henley's book of 'English Lyrics: Chaucer to Poe.' Mr. Couch's book lacks the distinction of Mr. Henley's, chiefly because Mr. Henley contributed to his volume a preface which is at once a history and a criticism of English poetry, and Mr. Couch's preface is mainly devoted to acknowledgments of favour received. Mr. Couch's, however, is the larger book and in some respects the more comprehensive. For example, it includes many pages of verse by living writers, and it is in those pages, we think, the editor's taste is most open to criticism. There are many pieces that could be well spared—pieces which have not the slightest chance of even a generation's immortality. These should not be included in an anthology having any pretensions to permanency. Mr. Couch's appreciation of contemporary poetry is indeed peculiar. Thus, while he presents specimens of the verse of Richard Le Gallienne, Henry Charles Beeching, A. C. Benson, Gilbert Parker, Laurence Binyon, T. Sturge Moore, and Frances Bannerman, he gives nothing from the pen of Mr. Robert Buchanan. Why? And while we are fault-finding we may ask who is John Boyd O'Reilly? We presume Mr. Couch means John Boyle O'Reilly. Though not free from defects which every lover of poetry will resent, the volume is in the main one which will be cherished. Like all the Oxford Press books it is admirably produced.

From the Oxford Press also comes a pretty pocket edition of The Early Poems of Lord Tennyson, printed on Oxford India paper. In form though perhaps rather dumpy, it is attractive and is well printed.

Messrs. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER.

Colina's Island, by Ethel F. Heddle. Colina, by the whim of a great uncle, becomes rich, and the owner of a beautiful island in Scotland. On the island, where she puts into action the philanthropic ideas she had imbibed in London, Cosmo, a handsome, selfish cousin, who had expected the property would have been left to him, makes love to her. He is already in love with Lilliard, a girl who pretended to be fond of Colina. Lilliard will not marry Cosmo because he is poor, and he, on his part, is more anxious to possess the island than the heart of Lilliard. Colina and he being engaged, they soon quarrel, because of Colina's insistence upon improving the condition of her tenants. How true love comes to Colina, how she loses her fortune, only to regain it, Miss Heddle tells in a charming manner. The story is interesting from beginning to end, and prettily illustrated.

Schooldays and Holidays, by Adelaide M. Cameron. A bright book for children. It treats of five little sisters, daughters of a busy London doctor. They wish for a baby brother very much, and write an amusing letter to an old nurse requesting one by a certain date, their mother's birthday. But they have to make up their minds to pass their lives without a brother. The little tale will keep any child quiet for an hour.

Messrs. S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

Deeds of Daring, Stories of Heroism in Everyday Life, selected by Charles D. Michael. With eight illustrations. A real service is rendered to young people by these stories of daring born of a strong desire to help some fellow-creature in imminent peril of life or limb—heroic deeds done by lowly men and women around whom there is no glamour, no meretricious adornment. Mr. Michael has done his work well, and we trust that 'Deeds of Daring' will be as successful as his book of 'Noble Deeds,' issued last year. He gives us twenty-seven stories of bravery and self-sacrifice, each told in a simple, earnest manner, well suited to the subject. They range from a travelling circus to shipwrecks, from sharks to railway engines, from mines to the North American Indians, from sewers to South Africa, and the heroes and heroines are as various as the scenes of their splendid courage. The pictures materially enhance the pleasure of the book.

The Burtons of Burdale, by John W. Kneeshaw. With six illustrations by J. R Burgess. A piquant narrative is this. Mr. Kneeshaw writes well, and, though his story is essentially one with a deep religious tone, he does not altogether subdue the promptings of humour, as so many writers of religious stories do—assuming they have any humour. The will of eccentric old Martin Burton, of Burdale, sets the scheme of incidents in motion. The curious provisions he makes as to the disposal of a hundred thousand pounds disturb the lives of some half-a-dozen people; among them an unprincipled lawyer, who, supposing Ada Burton to be the heiress, endeavours to make her his wife. But there is a young engineer on the scene who foils the lawyer's dishonest plans. And there are also Bob and Jim and little Reggy, three boys the reader will at once fall in love with. Ada's father, hard and stern, but brought at last to forgiveness and love, is well and firmly sketched. Mr. Burgess' pictures are capital.

Muriel Malone, or From Door to Door, by Charlotte Murray, with six illustrations by Florence Reason. This story is written in a deeply religious strain. We do not often hear of people grumbling because they suddenly find themselves in possession of twenty thousand pounds a year. But Muriel Malone shrinks from the great fortune left to her. She leaves her newly acquired lovely estate in Scotland because of the responsibilities of her position, and goes to live in a cottage in the South of England. There she meets a young doctor who devotes his money and time to the poor. We need not tell what follows, or what Muriel does with the fortune that she had thought too burdensome. The illustrations are very good.

The Children's Friend. A monthly magazine for boys and girls. Volume for 1900. As good as ever is this children's favourite. All their tastes in reading are considered and provided for, in stories, interesting general articles, poetry, and anecdote. Music is also given, and pictures innumerable.

The Family Friend, 1900. A Magazine for the Home Circle. This favourite annual hardly needs any commendation at this time of day. Admirably illustrated, and crowded with good things in the way of stories, short papers, verses, and music; it will be valued for family reading.

The Friendly Visitor, 1900. A Gospel Magazine for the People. This old established annual well maintains its place, and should be cordially welcomed in many a home.

The Band of Hope Review, 1900, edited by M. Jennie Street. This juvenile organ of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union is, as usual, full of entertaining, instructive matter, and, with its abundance of pictures as an extra attraction, should be as great a favourite with its friends as ever.

Marchester Stories, by the Rev. Charles Herbert, with four illustrations by T. Littler. A collection of short tales, distinctly religious in tone, descriptive of life in and about a northern industrial centre. The evils of loveless marriages, of a great regard for display, of gambling, dishonest trading, and other vices are dealt with, together with the beauty of their contrasts. Mr. Herbert has a fluent pen, and, while adorning his stories, he never fails to point their morals in a fashion from which no reader can escape.

The Lifeboat, its History and Heroes, by F. M. Holmes, with illustrations by C. J. Staniland, R.I., and others. A popularly written, non-technical account of the invention and development of the lifeboat, and of the lifeboat service. Information is also given as to the life-saving rocket apparatus and its work. Some thrilling stories of lifeboat rescues add considerably to the interest of this very useful book. It will surprise many readers to learn that there are eight types of boat under the control of the National Lifeboat Institution, built to cope with the various peculiarities of coasts and weather. The illustrations by Mr. Staniland are, of course, excellent.

Alfred the Great, the Father of the English, by Jesse Page, with eight illustrations. Alfred was perhaps the greatest king England ever had, and it is well, especially in these days, that the story of this pattern of the true patriot should be known and loved by the rising generation. To come to some understanding of his position and an appreciation of the stupendous work he did, a knowledge of England in his time is essential; and the author of this very capable and informing book draws a vivid picture of the social and religious environment of the age when the lines were being laid upon which the present greatness of England moves. He has not disdained legend. The noble figure of Alfred stands out heroically and strikingly in his pages. A capital book for the young; and in their reading of it they will be much helped by the illustrations.

Noble Work by Noble Women, by Jennie Chappell, with portraits and illustrations. The lives of five women, strikingly different in character but united in a common nobility of purpose and rare achievement on behalf of their fellow-creatures, are outlined in this work. They are the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Sarah Robinson, Mrs. Fawcett, and Mrs. Gladstone. Within a limited space Miss Chappell has managed to squeeze a vast amount of information, and sketches the careers of the ladies she deals with concisely, sympathetically, and in a most attractive manner. Her book could not fail to prove beneficial and stimulating to all young girls on the threshold of life. The portraits and illustrations of the homes and incidents in the lives of these noble women are admirable.

A Measuring Eye, by Elizabeth Stuart-Langford, with illustrations by Paul Hardy. A poor struggling authoress is robbed by her good-for-nothing brother, who leaves her without a penny with which to pay the rent that is due. Old Jonah Pritchard, whose 'measuring eye' could read a person's character or estimate the weight of a pig on the spot, makes her a present of the money; and this kindness on the part of a man lower in the social scale, and regarded by her with dislike, opens the girl's heart to more generous thoughts of others. Consequently she writes better than ever she did—and does better. The moral is not made too glaring, but is instilled very quietly and well in this interesting, well-told story.

The Fatal Nugget, by E. Harcourt Burrage, with six illustrations by Victor Venner. A quietly effective story of the wreck of the yacht 'Seamew,' in which Mr. Stanway and his family were sailing, off the coast of Brazil. They discover an old sailor who had been left on the spot fifteen years before, who speaks of a gold-field in the interior that no one else knows of. This excites the cupidity of the crew. They mutiny, rush off for gold, and then, when it is found, dissension breaks out among them and murder is the result. There is an air of reality about the story that renders it very convincing; and it points a stern moral.

The Three-cornered House, by the Author of 'Everybody's Friend,' with twelve illustrations by F. Reason. Drink, and the evils ensuing from it, are the theme of 'The Three-cornered House.' Roger Upchurch had many gifts, mental and physical, but his besetting weakness for drink ruined his life, and brought misery and suffering to many near to him. He manfully endeavoured to extricate himself from the thraldom of the curse of drink, and the last weeks of his life redeemed the degradation of his wretched past. The anonymous writer tells the story—in which, of course, there are several other characters more pleasant to meet than Roger—agreeably and interestingly. 'The Three-cornered House' should provide a welcome addition to the libraries of Sunday schools and temperance societies. It is very adequately illustrated.

From Alfred the Great

The New Biblical Guide, edited by the Rev.

John Urquhart, Vol. III. The previous volumes of this 'Guide' proved of great service to preachers and teachers, the sound information being conveyed in a lucid, practical way. This third volume should be equally useful. It deals with the Tower of Babel, Babylon, Patriarchal history, Abraham, the times of Isaac and Jacob, and the life of Joseph. The 'Guide' is constructive, not destructive, the mistakes of the Higher Criticism, the errors of Rationalists, being discussed and confuted. Students will find much of value in its comprehensive pages.

The Scarlet Judges, a Tale of the Inquisition in the Netherlands, by Eliza F. Pollard. Miss Pollard's new book is an historical romance of more than ordinary power. It is a poignant story of suffering endured for conscience sake, of persecution, and death; but its sombreness is relieved by the clear faith and bravery of the persecuted. Fitful lights gleam across the sadness; there is hope; and at last there is no question which way the fight for liberty and religion will end. The Spaniards had goaded the Netherlands to desperation, and the whole nation rose to close with the oppressors. The story is that of Countess Tessa, orphan daughter of a great nobleman, and of the hapless English girl Mopsa, married to the priest Christopher Fabricius, who had accepted the doctrines of the Reformation, and is betrayed by the terrible Long Marguerite. William the Silent comes into the story, too; and there are many gallant men who fight and die for their country. The wild, reckless, fearless Dirke Brederode is a striking figure, presented very vividly by the author. The siege of Alkmaar, which the Spaniards were forced to abandon, is thrillingly described. Here the Countess and Mopsa proved how courageous women can be. We heartily recommend the book, which has some first-rate illustrations.

Raymond's Angel, a Story of Two Lives Laid Down, by Blanche Garvock. Slight and brief is this story, but tender and pathetic in its interest. Verena Barnard determines to leave the comfort and luxury of her home in England, and, with the young doctor she is engaged to, to work in the missionary field. But her beautiful, generous life is cut short by an accident. Before her death she had persuaded the doctor it was their duty to separate, he going to the work they had looked forward to, and he had seen it was so. She dies, however, before he leaves; it is with her consecrated memory that he goes forth. A sweet little story, which deserves to be widely read. It is well illustrated.

Following Jesus, a Bible Picture Book for the Young, by D. J. D. In this very comely volume, with its large full-page coloured pictures and large type, are contained twelve of the best-known stories in the Bible, re-told in a clear simple manner easily comprehensible to the little ones. The finding of Moses, the story of Ruth and Naomi, of Samuel, of Simeon, and the infant Jesus, of the Wise Men's visit, of the Good Shepherd, and of the unmerciful servant, are among them.

HEBRON AS IT IS TO-DAY. From The New Biblical Guide

Around the Fire, Yuletide Stories, by Mrs. Haycraft. A pleasant series of Christmas tales Mrs. Haycraft has written, very suitable for family reading 'around the fire' these winter nights. A religious tone prevails in all of them; they inculcate good-will to men, and are steeped in the sentiments of love and the charms of home so appropriate to Christmas. The first story, 'Those Bells across the Snow,' tells how a girl, found when an infant in the snow on a Christmas eve, is loved by the boy who discovered her, and all goes well until the secret of her parentage is revealed and she becomes rich. The boy is too proud to seek her; he gains fame as a sculptor, and tries to forget her. But she does not forget, and the Christmas time comes round when all is put right for them. The other tales are just as readable.

Several additions to their well-known, popular series of picture-books for very little children have been made by Messrs. Partridge, and we can imagine few books more to their liking than these, with their plentiful pictures, their large type, and their easy words. The names of these new publications are: Holiday Hours in Animal Land, Going A-Sailing, Buttercups and Daisies, A Merry Game, and Off to Toyland.

Messrs. C. ARTHUR PEARSON, Limited.

Wooings and Weddings in Many Climes, by Louise Jordan Miln, with many illustrations. Mrs. Miln has produced a book brimful of very curious and instructive information. She has gathered from all parts of the world the courtship and marriage customs of the peoples, from the Eskimo, on the fringe of the North Pole, to the Patagonians, who live near the South Pole. Marriage is to her a comprehensive word, including the avowed monogamy of England, the sincere polygamy of Turkey, and the startling polyandry of Ceylon. There are, and have been, she says, three sorts of marriage: marriage by capture, by purchase, and by fascination. The first is obsolete in Europe. Marriage by purchase is unacknowledged in England; on the Continent it is called marriage by arrangement or of convenience. Among us, 'love matches' are the only marriages of which we openly speak. Mrs. Miln has a neat way of putting things, a real gift of description; and she imparts a very human interest to this excellent book, which might otherwise have easily been a mere collection of facts. Many quaint and pretty customs she presents for our delectation, and many a shrewd remark she makes on marriage in general, as it were, en route. Strangely enough, she has nothing to say on English marriage customs. Perhaps they lack the element of picturesqueness which those of other countries possess. But, however that may be, this book is vastly entertaining, and as its subject comes home to most of us it should be very popular. It is full of photographs of marriage ceremonies and brides of 'many climes.'

A CINGALESE GIRL. From Wooings and Weddings in Many Climes

A Child of the Sun, by Charles Eugene Banks, with coloured illustrations by Louis Betts. A curse had fallen upon the Children of the Sun because of the disobedience of Hasihta, their first earthly father. The other Indian tribes could not prevail against them, but the terrible Piasau, Bird of Evil, feasted only upon those of their blood, and long did he prey upon them. Then the Great Spirit was sorry; a sign was given that one should be born who would rid the Children of the Sun of their relentless foe. And great are the rejoicings when he appears. How he fulfils his destiny is the theme of an excellent story, written with grace and animation, with something of fervour rising even to the poetic in the telling. The pictures, too, are out of the common.

The Spell of the Snow, by C. Guise Mitford. The title-page of this story does not contain the name of any previous work of Mr. Mitford's, so it is permissible to suppose that with 'The Spell of the Snow' he makes his first bow to the public. If this be so, he is to be congratulated upon his achievement. He has got hold of a repellent subject, but treats it with restraint; and while the effect he produces is haunting in its sense of reality and terror, it is not due to melodramatic artifices, but to the inherent horror of the subject itself, treated with skill and power. From the moment Chard steps over the threshold of the desolate house on the Yorkshire wold, the door opened to him by the man with the beautiful face and the magnificent voice, we are held by the sense of dread, of impending disaster. Mr. Mitford gets the 'atmosphere' of the story unerringly for his purpose. The man is insane, subject to violent outbreaks at the approach of snow, and to his care and safety his sister devotes her existence. Christmas comes, and with it the tragedy. The fearful struggle which so nearly ends fatally to Chard is succeeded by an appalling development, depicted by Mr. Mitford with dramatic force and intensity. The brave girl is stricken also with madness, and the story ends with the terrible deeds that destroy at once the 'Spell of the Snow,' and her own life. The book grips the reader, he is fascinated as by one of Edgar Allan Poe's stories; but the impression he carries away from it is of profound pity, not of horror, which is often the only effect made upon the reader by Poe's marvellous imaginings. We shall look eagerly for Mr. Mitford's next work.

Two Boys in War-time, by John Finnemore, with illustrations by Lawson Wood. Another story of the present war, with Dan and Jack March as the young heroes who go through nerve-shattering perils, pick off Boers as easily as a girl gathers gooseberries in a garden, give the information that enables officers to capture guns and obtain promotion, and generally conduct themselves as all British boys, with the lust of blood in them, yearn to do. Mr. Finnemore writes with spirit, and describes the exciting incidents that fill the book with skill and effect. The war is not yet over, and the events recorded in 'Two Boys in War-time' took place not many months ago; yet we have it stated that Dan March, looking back upon certain occurrences 'in after years,' regarded them as an evil dream. 'After years' should, no doubt, be amended.

In the Days of my Youth, with an introduction by T. P. O'Connor, illustrated with sixteen photographs. Republished in this volume are the autobiographies of thirty-four well-known men and women of the day, who contributed them to a well-known series in a popular social weekly. Mr. O'Connor says of them that they may, in addition to the amusement they offer, act as a stimulus and encouragement to those who have still their way in the world to make. Literature, art, music, the stage, and politics have their representatives here, and a very varied assortment of experiences do we meet with. Mrs. Kendal, Mrs. Langtry, Miss Edna May, Miss Julia Neilson, Mr. Martin Harvey, and Mr. Hermann Vezin, in the stories of their early days, contribute much that is of interest; and the musicians—among whom are Sir Arthur Sullivan, Madame Patti, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Madame Melba—are in no whit behind. Madame Sarah Grand tells her story of the long years she had to wait for recognition characteristically; Mr. Clement Scott dilates upon the many efforts that were made to keep him from rising; and Mr. Marcus Stone relates the story of the reconciliation of Thackeray and Dickens after their long estrangement, giving it in a form that must be new to many. The most entertaining of these ingenuous self-revelations—that in several instances, are extremely piquant because of what they do not state—are perhaps those of Mr. Phil May and Mr. Henry Lucy ('Toby, M.P.'), the latter particularly so. But for charm and interest and sincerity of feeling none of them equals Mr. Justin McCarthy's.

The Wide, Wide World, by Elizabeth Wetherell, with illustrations by Fred. Pegram. An exceedingly neat edition of this old favourite. The type is good, the illustrations are such as Mr. Pegram's reputation for artistic work leads us to expect, and the result is a volume fit for any library.

The Other One, by Gertrude M. Hayward (Mrs. F. W. Crampton), illustrated by Cecil Aldin. A charming story of a cat, told by himself. We are introduced to his relatives, Cosette and Blackie, and their little mistress, and a cruel boy. Little readers will enjoy the book immensely, and grow excited over the adventures of the poor, despised 'Other One,' who is the means of saving several lives from death by fire. Its moral is—

> He prayeth best who loveth best
> All things both great and small.

Mr. Aldin's pictures add much to the volume's attractiveness.

The Pilgrim's Progress from this World to that which is to come, by John Bunyan, with illustrations by H. M. Brock. A useful edition of the immortal allegory, well printed and bound. Mr. Brock's illustrations are spirited and really illustrative. Of single-volume, cheap editions we know none better than this.

Fiddlesticks, by Hilda Cowham. Exceedingly clever and humorous are the coloured and black-and-white pictures that accompany the nursery jingles, 'This Little Pig Went to Market,' 'Dame Trot,' 'Oranges and Lemons,' &c., included in this gorgeous volume. The little ones will be delighted with it; even those of a larger growth will obtain from Miss Cowham's 'grotesques' considerable entertainment.

Roy, a Tale of the Days of Sir John Moore, by Agnes Giberne. Give this book to a boy to read, and we venture to say he will not leave it until the last page is reached. Colonel Baron took advantage of the peace between England and France in 1803 to run over to Paris with his wife, his son Roy, a boy of twelve, and Captain Ivor, to whom he was guardian. The intention was to stay a fortnight, but they do not see England for many years. Illness overtakes them; before they are able to travel, war breaks out, and they are detained as prisoners of war. Then the adventures of Roy begin. He destroys a bust of Napoleon, and for this is sent to a citadel, where he languishes for many months. He manages to give his jailors the slip, and, after many other escapades in France, he at last joins the English army in Spain under Sir John Moore. The great general is Roy's hero, as he is Miss Giberne's. There is some passionate pleading in the pages of this clever and fine book for justice to Sir John, who with twenty-three thousand men opposed the vast armies of the Emperor. The famous retreat to Coruña is described with exceeding animation and spirit—it is, indeed, a very good piece of work. The death of Moore is pathetically described. Engaging love stories run through the book, which is enriched with capital pictures.

Shadows from the Thames, by Edward Noble, illustrated. With the Thames as the scene, and its darkness, tragedy, and crime as the subjects, of a volume of stories, we look for something that will at least keep us awake. Mr. Noble does more than that humble service; he carries us along with him breathlessly, but gladly, and it is with real regret that we arrive at the conclusion of his book. It starts well. The skipper of the barge 'Buccaneer,' intending to return to his ship after a few hours ashore, is astonished to find that she has disappeared. He searches high and low—there is not the slightest sign of her. He interests Gaskin, of the yacht 'Vigilante,' in the affair, and in this boat they make a further search. Ultimately the 'Buccaneer' is discovered, scuttled. She had been used by Anarchists to carry dynamite with which to blow up another ship, the 'Sultan.' This is not the end of the adventure by any means. Let it suffice to say that Gaskin derives intense pleasure and interest from it, and he becomes a sort of Sherlock Holmes, hunting down various criminals that prowled about the river. A vivid story is that of the 'Silent Sentinels.' The river is utilised to hide the crimes of baby-farmers. After being starved to death, the babies are packed in cement and dropped in the Thames. Gaskin unravels this mystery and sundry others. 'Shadows from the Thames' is a book to keep one up when one would otherwise go to bed.

Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

The Things that Count, by Elizabeth Knight Tompkins. Miss Tompkins is an American writer whose books enjoy an enviable popularity in the United States. In this novel of American society she gives us a thoroughly healthy book for girls that should add to her reputation. To English readers it has the novelty of freshness, and is written in a graphic, businesslike way that has an attraction of its own. Perhaps some of the phrases used by the ladies and gentlemen will sound strangely to us—such as 'You seem to have very little use for my society,' 'After they had done their manners,' and a frequent use of 'Great Scott!' The story is of the development of Evelyn Smith, a young lady of selfish nature, to whom the good things of the world—money, a fine house and servants, horses and carriages, and choice food and raiment, are everything. She is poor, and, unwilling to do anything for herself, goes from one rich friend's place to another on long visits. Love transforms her; she finds out in time what are 'the things that count.' Miss Tompkins has a pretty gift for etching a picture and drawing a character, and her book is decidedly one that girls should read.

Talks with Barbara, by Elizabeth Knight-Tompkins. These talks are 'an informal and experimental discussion, from the point of view of a young woman of to-morrow, of certain of the complexities of life, particularly in regard to the relations of men and women.' Barbara is a young American girl, a writer, and she discusses with a New York doctor, also young, the subjects of the inferior position of women, marriage, the man-and-woman game, the man-and-woman fight, dowries, the tree of knowledge, masculine and feminine honour, personal charm, and other matters. Barbara is somewhat morbid and introspective, and dislikes French men and women because of their dirty minds, Germans because they are so vulgar, and the English of both sexes for many reasons. She 'yearns,' as do the maidens in 'Patience,' and laments the size of her feet. In her contentions, her protests against the restrictions that men have placed upon women, we meet with old friends—in fact, she says nothing new. It is implied that she does; and this may be true as far as America is concerned. But her opinions found a place in the books of advanced English novelists of her sex years ago.

Let there be Light, by David Lubin. This is an American book, which contains the story of a working-men's club, its search for the causes of poverty and social inequality, its discussions, and its plan for the amelioration of existing evils. Not a book to dally with by any means—it requires close attention; and the reward is much information about the labour problems that agitate the States. Creeds are as ardently criticised as the relations of capital and labour. But we fancy Mr. Lubin might have conveyed his ideas in a more attractive way. The club members are very earnest, very honest, and unflinching in the expression of their opinions, and they are often deadly dull. Papers are read and discussed, and long quotations given from Adam Smith, the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' Spinoza, Maimonides, Herbert Spencer, and others; and the reader longs for rest, a little lightness of touch, some recognition of the joy there is in life. He thinks of the Mutual Improvement Society of his youth, and sighs. A strenuous, useful book, but likely to fail in its object through its heaviness. Yet there are works on Mr. Lubin's subjects that are a pleasure to read.

The RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Gold in the Furnace, by M. H. Cornwall Legh. The perfecting of character by the ordeal of sorrow and disgrace is the theme of 'Gold in the Furnace.' Mary Copeland, who, that some poor relatives may have a roof over them, leaves her home and enters the service of a neighbouring family, is accused of stealing a ring and bracelet belonging to one of the daughters of the house. She is sent to gaol for three months. Her cousin Milly is the thief, and Mary is made aware of this while in prison. But to save her cousin she makes no attempt to prove her own innocence, and serves the full term. Her sweetheart and others discover the culprit, however, and would have punished her. Mary will not consent to this, so Milly goes scot-free, Mary believing that it was her duty to bear the shame instead of her dishonest cousin. There are gruesome pictures of prison life in the book. Mary is sustained in her troubles by her religious convictions, but the argument that punishment is good, even for the innocent, appears to be pushed to an extreme, especially as the guilty one gets free, and our credulity is severely taxed by the author. In such a view of life as is represented here justice would seem to have no place.

Tom Wallis, a Tale of the South Seas, by Louis Becke, with eleven illustrations by Lancelot Speed. A story about the South Seas, and by Mr. Louis Becke! Boys—and men—will take up the book with eagerness, and will not lay it down until the last sentence is reached. No one knows the mighty waters dotted with their strange islands so well as he; and, like a wizard, he brings them vividly before us. He crowds his volume with incident, with quick, palpitating adventure; he enlivens us with the variety of characters—wild, humorous, brave, enigmatic, honest, bad, and indifferent—that he brings upon the scene; and with unerring hand he paints them as they are—they stand out true to the life. From the hour Tom Wallis leaves his home on the Australian coast to find his father and brother, and tell them of the shipwrecked crew that have been landed in their absence, we are on the crest of adventure, and we are carried gallantly on to the end. We shall not reveal the plot of the story, or follow Tom in his long, involuntary cruise, from which so much followed; let us, rather, unreservedly and warmly recommend the book to all who wish for a fine story finely told. The illustrations are in the true spirit of the tale.

The Sunday at Home, 1900, illustrated. An excellent volume is the Sunday at Home for this year, full of capital things adapted for family reading. Articles on subjects of the day, on religious, social, domestic matters, essays, poetry, and music, besides serials by Mary E. Palgrave and Evelyn Everett Green and others, are contained in its eight hundred pages. Black-and-white illustrations are scattered generously throughout the annual, together with first-class plates printed in colours. Of its kind there is no better magazine.

Daniel's Fallen Dagon, by H. Louisa Bedford. Daniel Maynard was the barber in the little town of Crossthwaite, and he had a son and two daughters. One of them, Nellie, is blind. Ernest, the son, is a weak young fellow, with a dislike for his father's business. Lily, who helps her father in a toy-shop, is in love with Roger Stevens, but she refuses him because he and Ernest go drinking together, and the consequence is that both the lads enlist. Roger afterwards shows that he is a true hero, and makes amends for his errors. Several illustrations help the interest of this book, which is well fitted for Sunday-school libraries.

Enid Duncan, or the Discipline of a Year, by Edith E. Rhodes. Enid Duncan, a little child of ten, is sent to live with her grandfather in Cornwall for a year. Her aunt is an extreme Ritualist, and so are the rector and curate. But Enid's talks with the curate have a lasting influence upon him; he renounces his High-Church views and becomes an Evangelical; and the aunt, before she dies, is shaken in the convictions that were so much to her. The hard-hearted rector is obliged to resign. And all this is the work of a small girl!

The Schoolmistress of Haven's End, by Ella Edersheim Overton, illustrated. A moving, capitally written tale, happily relieved with touches of humour, is 'The Schoolmistress of Haven's End.' She is Joan Harding, a young girl who, out of her love for children and desire to do something for them, leaves her luxuriant home in London and becomes the mistress of a school in a miserable Hertfordshire village. The work is hard and her pupils unpromising, but she never falters; and the miserable place is gradually transformed by her kindly influence. This is a story that girls will certainly enjoy.

Adventures in the South Pacific, by One who was Born there, with six illustrations by Lancelot Speed. The anonymous author of this book is the son of a missionary who spent many years of his life among the South Sea Islands. It was while the father and mother were journeying from one island to another that their son was born, on an islet not more than an acre in extent. The South Pacific and the islands were then practically unknown; and our author has much that is new and instructive to say concerning the natives and their manners and customs while yet they were almost entirely free from European influences. Perhaps the most interesting portion of the book is that in which is related the stealing of some native children by the son of a chief, to be eaten. The thief was pursued after he had taken to the sea; and in his attempt to swim to the shore, and so escape, he was drawn under, and met with a terrible death.

LOVEDALE STUDENTS. From The Sunday at Home

A Little Protestant in Rome, by Eglanton Thorne. Paul Bernard, aged five, was staying in Rome with his mother, who had separated from her husband in a fit of temper. She was very lonely and miserable, and almost decided to join the Roman Church. Paul's artless prattle, however, had more power over her than a priest's arguments, and she remained a Protestant. Paul's word in season in another direction also revealed to an erring young woman whom he saved from suicide the badness of her ways, and she returned to the parental roof. Paul was furthermore instrumental in bringing his parents together; and he also nearly died when this had been accomplished, having contracted fever. But, of course, he recovers.

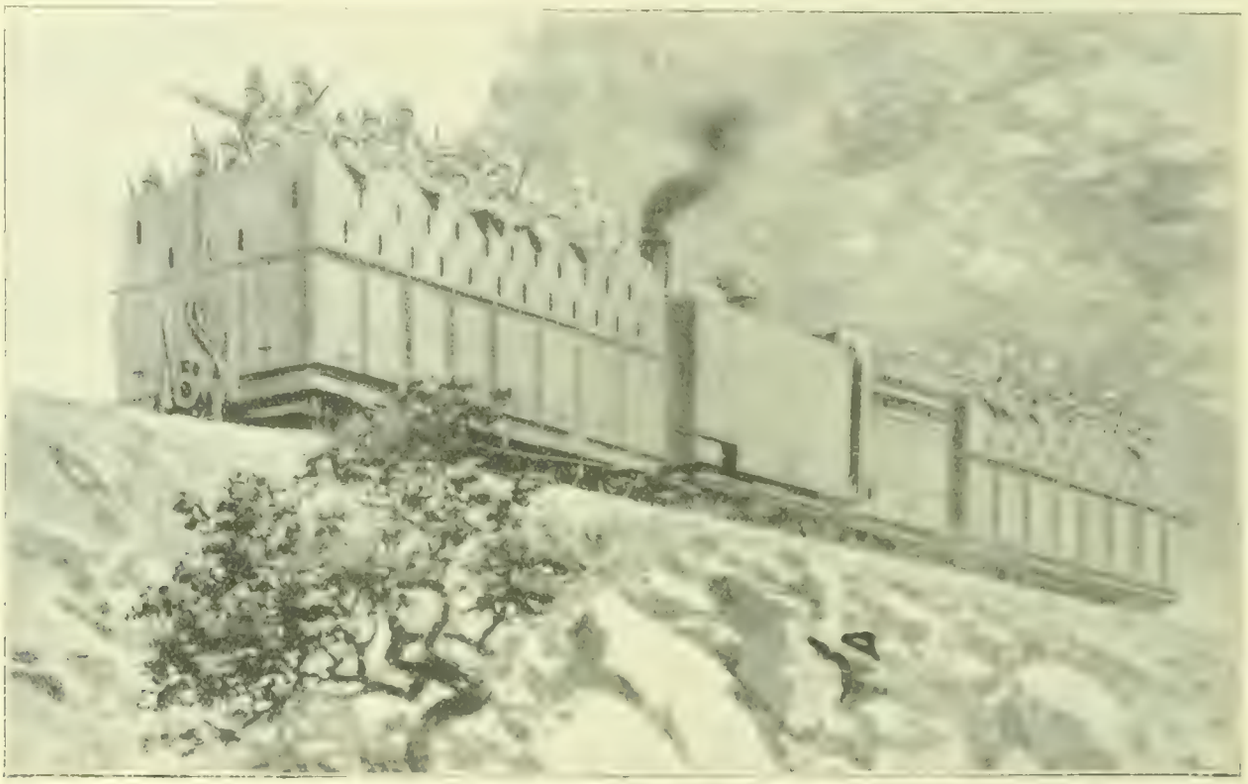
Three Little Great Ladies, by W. Percy Smith. Margaret, and Sylvia, and Elizabeth Fox are young orphans, very rich, and, as they think, very selfish. They resolved to do something that shall mean self-denial, something they hate to do because it will interfere with their pleasures. The task is hard, and several times they fall below the standard they had set up for themselves. But they do not altogether fail, as readers will learn if they read this agreeable record of their doings.



With our Soldiers at the Front, or Conflict and Victory in South Africa, by Henry Johnson. There are fifteen good photographs of events in the Boer war included in this volume, which consists of a temperate and intelligent narrative of events a little beyond the occupation of Pretoria. The first chapter contains a brief history of Cape Colony and the Boers up to the beginning of hostilities in October 1899. Interspersed with the historical narrative are stories and incidents from the camp, battlefield, and hospital. Altogether the book is compact and very useful for reference.

No. 6 Victoria Ward, by Jessie Armstrong. A sweet little girl, whose mother was dead, was taken into the country by her aunt for a brief holiday, and was lost. The aunt thought she had been burned to death in a rick-fire, and mourned for her for years. But the little girl was taken care of by an old man, his daughter, and her son, and grew up well and strong. Meanwhile, Madge, the aunt, met with a serious accident, and had to enter the hospital. She and her sister, the mother of the lost child, had been estranged from their father. In the hospital she was reconciled to him, and then it turned out that he was the child's grandfather. His hard heart was softened by the love of the little girl. This is the outline of 'No. 6 Victoria Ward'—the sketch should be filled in by reading the book itself.

About Peggy Saville, by Jessie Mansergh, illustrated. Mariquita was her name, and on state occasions, or when she pretended that she was offended, she insisted upon being so addressed, but as Peggy she was known to all her friends—and she had troops of them. When she was left alone in the country vicarage for three years, her parents being away in India, she was at first a mysterious little creature, and those around her did not know what to make of her. But her manner was only assumed; she wished to find out what kind of people they were. She becomes the life, the pet of the vicarage: mischievous, witty, nonsensical, clever, she draws all hearts to her; for she was as kind as she was delightful. The author promises to tell us more, in another volume, of Peggy, and we shall be delighted to renew her very charming acquaintance. 'About Peggy Saville' is certainly one of the most engaging books for girls we have read this season.

Between Two Opinions, by Mary E. Palgrave, illustrated. There is much tenderness and much talent in this story of Alethea Mordaunt and Frank Elliston. Alethea is engaged to him—she is young, very innocent, with no knowledge of the world, but with high ideals—and she learns that he is not as good a man as she had pictured in her dreams of him. Constance, his strong-minded sister, urges her to say nothing to him, not to break off her engagement, as it might result in his moral ruin. Eleanor Wilson, on the other hand, when Alethea goes to her in her perplexity, points out that there is only one thing to do—the thing she thinks right. Alethea wavers, and then decides that she and Frank must part—and they do. But happiness comes again after a while.

Among the many periodicals, British and American, which cater for young people The Boy's Own Paper and The Girl's Own Paper have no real rivals. The average British boy of any taste and intelligence would be miserable without his B.O.P., as would the average girl of intelligence without her G.O.P. Both papers are models of what periodicals for youth ought to be—that is to say, they are at once interesting and elevating, up to date, and yet perfectly free from the elements of degeneration which affect so many of their contemporaries. The annual volumes are, therefore, prizes to be sought and cherished. This year they are fully up to the standard which has been so well maintained in the past. There are stories by noted writers for boys and girls, articles without number on subjects of interest, and an almost bewildering variety of pictures. Among those who contribute serials and short stories are, for the B.O.P., Mr. David Ker, Mr. Arthur L. Knight, Dr. Gordon Stables, and Jules Verne; for the G.O.P., Miss Rosa N. Carey, Leslie Keith, and Miss Sarah Doudney. These names speak for themselves.

HURRAH FOR WINTER! From "The Boy's Own Paper"

Geoff Blake, his Chums and his Foes, by S. S. Pugh, with illustrations by Lancelot Speed. Geoff Blake was the son of an illiterate farmer, and his uncle was a poor shoemaker: facts of which certain boys in the school in which Geoff was a pupil did not fail to remind him. But, as we are reminded in the lines the author quotes as a motto:

> Honour and shame from no conditions rise,
> Act well thy part, there all the honour lies.

Geoff was by nature a true gentleman, and his strong sense of honour, his sturdy truthfulness, and his kindness influenced many lives for good. Becoming a captain in the Royal Navy, he died as he had lived, for others. This story of his life may be strongly recommended.

Allan Adair, or Here and There in Many Lands, by Dr. Gordon Stables, R.N., with ten illustrations by Alfred Pearse. Allan Adair and Rory O'Flinn, whose nationalities are sufficiently indicated by their names, are the heroes of this book, which is as crowded with adventure in the wildest portions of the globe as any boy could ask for. The two lads had had a taste of sea life before setting out with Baron Ranzikoff, the missionary Ross McLean, and others upon the journey that was so fruitful in incident. They visit the Rocky Mountains, Iceland among many other places, and come to Tierra del Fuego. There their ship is cast upon the rocks, and terrible privations await them. The survivors—and our heroes are of them—take to the boats, and have a fight with cannibals before they can land on an island, which is soon after the scene of a devastating fire. Amid such disheartening surroundings have they to face the possibility of an indefinite stay. The island has its mysteries, like Prospero's, and Rory learns what was the fate of his father, who had disappeared long before; and gold is discovered. All come safely out of their difficulties at last, richer by what they have gone through.

Through a Needle's Eye, by Hesba Stretton, with a frontispiece. A sermon is the influence that leads Justin Webb to repair the great wrong he had done to his half-brother, Richard Herford. Years before, Richard, his father's only child and therefore heir to Herford Court, had been disinherited, and had disappeared. Justin's mother had married Mr. Herford, and he was the only one of the family who knew the latter had relented towards Richard. Justin thinks he had destroyed the new will by which Richard was reinstated, but by an accident this document, unknown to him, was saved. Justin, on the Squire's death, takes possession of all. Richard returns after a long absence, and Justin is face to face with the problem of doing right and giving up the property. He loves the power it gives him, and there is his daughter to consider. Racked by conflicting feelings he goes to church, and hears a sermon on rich men and the needle's eye. This decides him; he restores the property, and, with his daughter, seeks work in London. But his doing the right thing brings him his reward in the after years.

Child Life in China, by Mrs. Bryson, of the London Mission, Tientsin, China, with many illustrations. Mrs. Bryson, during her labours of love in China, has had unique opportunities for studying the children of the Celestial Empire. She speaks their language; they have visited her for relief from sickness and for comfort in distress; she has lived and travelled with them. Consequently she has much to tell us of their lives, so different from that of English children; so different outwardly, that is, yet so similar in the primary elements of human nature. She writes picturesquely, bringing out the scenes she describes in a few words. English children should read this book; in becoming acquainted with the strange life of the Chinese little ones, through so good a guide as Mrs. Bryson, they will learn something they should know, and, we trust, their sympathies will be widened. The numerous pictures are very good.

The Children's King, the Life of Jesus retold for Young Readers by Annie R. Butler, with five coloured plates from pictures by J. J. Tissot, and many illustrations. The great subject of this volume has been most reverently and skilfully handled. 'Care has been taken to tell the story in words which the youngest readers understand; to draw from it such lessons as bear practically on the lives of "these little ones," and to explain its surroundings clearly.' Uncertain points are referred to well-known authorities, such as Edersheim, Gardiner, Andrewes, Conder, and others. One of the author's purposes is to inspire in her young readers a desire for work in the mission field when they grow old enough. A task most delicate to deal with has been performed most creditably, and this life of the 'King' should be found in many households. The wonderful plates, printed in colours, after Tissot, give the book an artistic value of a high character. It is beautifully bound.

The Leisure Hour, 1900, illustrated. Containing over a thousand pages, this annual is crammed with stories, articles, poetry, &c., of the most varied and interesting kind, suitable to the tastes of all. Sir Walter Besant and Mr. Louis Becke, among others, contribute serials. There are scores of pictures, including coloured plates and frontispiece. There is hardly a magazine like it in its almost universal appeal.

WINTER IN THE HIGHLANDS From The Leisure Hour

The Lord's Purse-Bearers, by Hesba Stretton. The author of 'Jessica's First Prayer' endeavours in 'The Lord's Purse-Bearers' to inculcate the lesson, or warning, that indiscriminate charity is an evil. 'Blessed is the man who considereth the poor,' she quotes—with emphasis upon 'considereth'—'not the man or woman who carelessly flings a penny or a sixpence to every beggar in the lanes and streets.' In this story old Roger Chippendell, embarrassed by a legacy of fifty pounds, decides to devote the sum to charity, and travels to London to consult his brother Isaac upon the best way of distributing it. His eyes are opened to the hardships that children suffer by being sent into the streets by their worthless parents for the purpose of begging—how they are starved as a matter of business, and made to look so worn and ill that they make an easy prey of the thoughtlessly kind passers-by. We meet with little Fidge and Joan, who are thus transformed into a snare for the unwary, and the wonderful baby Lucky, with whom Joan runs away. Joan is an attractive little creature. Hesba Stretton writes strongly on this question of almsgiving, and makes out a strong case for her side.

Journeys to Jerusalem, or Bible Names, a Sunday afternoon occupation for young people, by Mary and Isabel Moule. This is a game, played with counters on a board divided into sections, suitable for eight players. The object is to reach the centre of the board—Jerusalem. Before this can be done, there are dozens of names of places and persons to be encountered, and explanations have to be given of them before the player can proceed. A game to test Scriptural knowledge, and to add to it.

A Wilful Ward, by Ruth Lamb, illustrated. Kathleen Mountford is the 'wilful ward.' Her wilfulness brings heavy sorrow upon her, and only by stern experience and discipline does she overcome her fault. An unscrupulous ex-captain, who had to leave the army because of his dishonourable conduct, seeks to marry her, and so possess her large fortune. Though warned as to his character, she disdains the advice of her friends, and becomes his wife. Her troubles soon commence. Her husband did not care for her, it was her money he loved, and he speedily runs through it all. His death is her deliverance ; and then a happier life opens out for her.

The Way into the Kingdom, or Thoughts on the Beatitudes, by the Rev. J. D. Jones, M.A., B.D. One of the 'Quiet Hour' series ; sermonettes that will prove acceptable to Sunday-school teachers and their classes.

Knots, Quiet Chats with Boys and Girls, by Archibald N. Mackray, M.A. This volume contains eighteen little sermons, or 'quiet chats,' each headed with an attractive and original title. Mr. Mackray writes in a simple, straightforward manner, and is instructive as well as interesting.

How to Attain Fellowship with God, by the Rev. J. A. Clapperton, M.A. ('Books for Quiet Moments' series.) 'Unless a rich and fervent friendship is carried on between our soul and God, our religion is scarcely worth the name.' To help in the cultivation of this friendship is Mr. Clapperton's object, and the suggestions he makes have, he says, been put to the proof in his own experience.

Life's Anchor, a Tale of the Days of Dr. Johnson and Hannah More, by Harriet E. Colville, illustrated. This volume is largely concerned with the religious difficulties of Dr. Johnson, and the change which came over his views at the end and enabled him to meet death calmly and with hope. It also introduces us to Hannah More ; and her conversation, as here set down, is portentously dull, to speak the truth. The Rev. John Newton, Lady Austen, Fanny Burney, Boswell, and Reynolds appear on the scene, but we cannot say that, as represented in this story, their society is any gratification. The trials of Charlotte Leslie form the subject of the tale. She meets and marries Mr. Thursby, whose ideas on religion differ from those of her friends ; and they are very anxious lest she should be led astray from the right path. Thursby is a villain, as Charlotte too soon finds out. He dies, however, through injuries met with in the Lord George Gordon riots ; and in after years Charlotte marries a clergyman, with whose convictions no fault is found. Nearly all the illustrious people named above discuss Charlotte's first husband with her, frankly condemning his attitude on religious questions. Dr. Johnson is emphatic in all he says. We prefer him in Boswell's 'Life.'

The Royal Observatory, Greenwich, a Glance at its History and Work, by E. Walter Maunder, F.R.A.S., with many portraits and illustrations. Mr. Maunder's official association with Greenwich Observatory especially fitted him to become its historian, and he has produced a volume of extreme interest. Many of us, perhaps, regard the Observatory, as he says, as an establishment where astronomers pass agreeably a very easy time. As a matter of fact, it is the most practical place in the kingdom. Instead of a life of dreamy ecstasy or transcendental speculation, the searchers of the sky have to give the keenest attention to minute practical details ; they approximate to the engineer on the one side, to the accountant on the other. The Observatory was founded in the interests of the navy and of commerce, to assist navigation by finding out the 'so-much desired Longitude at sea, for the perfecting the art of navigation,' as King Charles II.'s warrant creating the Observatory phrased it. This idea of practical usefulness has been the guide of all the eight Astronomers-Royal who have had charge of the Observatory since 1675. Their labours were essential in the progress of England to its present position as the first commercial nation. Mr. Maunder brings this out well and carefully. It is not all utility, however ; there is plenty of romance and human interest in the lives of the famous men who have reigned at the Observatory ; and romance, too, in their discoveries, and the story of the gradual acquisition of the wonderful collection of instruments which makes Greenwich Observatory the greatest place of its kind in the world. There are portraits of the Astronomers Royal, and photographs of buildings and instruments to add to the reader's enjoyment of this welcome book.

Our Little Dots, Pretty Pictures and Stories for Little Girls and Boys, and The Child's Companion, illustrated by well-known artists, are two annuals that are in no need of recommendation. They have stood the test of time and not been found wanting. The Child's Companion was first issued in 1824, so it must be quite the oldest magazine for children. The two publications contain stories and articles and poems, and lots of illustrations such as the little ones delight in ; and the traditions of past years are faithfully maintained as to their tone and tendency.

The Great Rest Giver, by William Haig Miller. Christ is the great rest giver, and Mr. Miller writes to 'show His beneficent power to give relief under the various forms of trouble that assail humanity.' In these short papers on the various ills that visit us Mr. Miller writes amiably, if not profoundly. Evangelical in tone, the reflections are interspersed with anecdotes. Mr. Miller has little sense of the congruous; he tells us that 'the King of Uganda was called the "causer of tears"—Christ may be termed the "Drier of tears;"' and Charles Lamb and his soon-abandoned journey to discover the springs of the New River are brought into a homily on 'Broken Aims'! The volume is presentably bound and printed.

From Aldershot to Pretoria, a Story of Christian Work among Troops in South Africa, by W. E. Sellers, with an Introduction by the Rev. R. W. Allen, with fifteen illustrations. Tired of accounts of battles and frightful slaughterings, many should turn to this record of the works of peace and devotion amid the horrors of war. It covers a sphere of action too often forgotten or ignored. The chaplains and their helpers who accompanied our troops to the front were true heroes, who thought nothing of the perils they ran if only they could be of use and could bring consolation to the men they looked after so carefully and tenderly. Mr. Sellers tells an inspiring, noble story, which is rich also in illustration of the ways of soldiers and of their silent, uncomplaining endurance of hardship and pain. Of the humours of the camp there are plenty of instances. The pictures of soldier life and the portraits of ministers who went through the campaign are faithful and striking. A book that should be in every soldier's library.

The Cottager and Artisan, the People's Own Paper, 1900. This old favourite, now in its fortieth volume, admirably maintains its excellence. Its large pages are full of first-class articles of the kind for which this annual has so long been popular; and its full-page pictures and sketches are contributed by artists of acknowledged eminence. It is really a magazine for the people, and should be in greater request than ever.

Hidden Beauties of Nature, by Richard Kerr, F.G.S. With fifty-nine illustrations from sketches and photographs. Easy is the path made nowadays for those who desire to study the sciences! Here is this excellent book, which is now in its second edition—crammed full of instruction, given in a simple direct way that admirably hides the labour and research that must have been required to produce it. No puzzling definitions, difficult classifications, many-syllabled names—all is made plain to the dullest, who, armed with this book, may venture to investigate the wonders of nature confident that he has a guide that will not lead him astray.

Light in the Home and Tract Magazine, 1900, Vol. IX., illustrated. This annual contains many religious papers, Bible readings, Scripture exercises, and texts, a serial story by Mrs. G. S. Reaney, poetry, anecdotes, &c. It should be of use in Sunday schools. Its teaching is Evangelical, free from narrowness. Many pretty illustrations help the letterpress.

From From Aldershot to Pretoria

Mr. GRANT RICHARDS.

A Trip to Toyland, a Picture-story told by Henry Mayer. The alluring history of Dumpy Babe and his toys. He ill-treats them, but they forgive him, and take him on a trip to Toyland, where he sees many wondrous things. The book wherein all this may be read is full of funny pictures in colours; and altogether the little ones could have no more delightful gift than this.

The Tremendous Twins, or How the Boers were Beaten, pictures by Mrs. Ernest Ames, verses by Ernest Ames. This is a terrible story of the great doings of the twins, aged three, who were not satisfied with the way the war was going. They had a plan, and were taken by their nurse to Windsor to discuss it with the Queen, who at once appointed them Commanders-in-Chief. But before they go to Africa they overhaul the organisation at the War Office, turn out the staff, and frighten the Committee of Defence. Arrived at the front, the Generals called upon them, and to those who had been good they extended a smile, but the others they punished.

> And they ended by saying,
> (Now, reader, don't laugh),
> 'We appoint darling Bobs
> To be Chief of our Staff!'

We need not say that they conquered the Boers, who had dreaded their coming.

> And at last when Pretoria
> Hove into sight,
> The entire Boer army
> Was quaking with fright.

A capital book for children. Their elders will not miss its sarcasm. The pictures, printed in colours, are richly funny; they will provoke roars of laughter.

A Cat Book, portraits by H. Officer Smith, characteristics by E. V. Lucas. One of the 'Dumpy Books for Children' that have won their way into the nursery so quickly and so worthily. This veracious record of pussy will take high rank in the series. Her characteristics are hit off pithily by Mr. Lucas. The little ones will learn from him all her likes and dislikes, her ways, pleasant and unpleasant. These lines should disturb the conscience of many a boy who has been guilty of the crime spoken of:

> The man to Puss is also kind,
> But quite the contrary, the boy,
> Who can, I grieve to mention, find,
> In teasing her, acutest joy.

The accompanying picture of poor Tabby with a can tied to her tail must awaken awkward memories in the minds of young culprits, who, after this, may be expected to mend their manners. The illustrations are full of humour and expression.

Chapel Street Children, Pictures and Stories, by Edith Farmiloe. We were reminded of Dickens and his Christmas books, of Tiny Tim and Bob Cratchit, as we read the stories in this volume. Remarkably well written they are, but this is the least of their recommendations. There is the true touch of love and understanding and sympathy in these chronicles of the little outcasts of London, who are written about as if the writer knew them and their unlovely surroundings intimately, and as if her heart ached with their young sorrows and bitter sufferings. Laughter ripples through her pages, but tears are not far off. We cannot go much lower in the social scale than we are taken in this kindly, human book; but there is nothing in it repulsive, unclean; we feel only pity and indignation that such things can be. Even here there are simple faith and kindly deeds, the hard realities of the street cannot crush all goodness and self-sacrifice. The book is one to be thankful for. 'A Christmas Tree' and 'Christmas Tree Seeds' are, perhaps, the best of the stories, but all are entrancing. The pen-and ink pictures are triumphs in their grim realism. We hope for a wide popularity for this remarkable book.

My Lady Cinderella, by Mrs. C. N. Williamson, with frontispiece. Mrs. Williamson writes that those who run may read. Her dashing style is all her own; and if she owes little to art, she can compass a story that causes the time spent in reading it to pass quickly and pleasantly. 'My Lady Cinderella' is a novel sure to please the admirers of her former productions. A swiftly moving series of sensational incidents, in which we are not troubled with analysis of character or any pedantic adherence to the rules of probability or the facts of life—such is 'My Lady Cinderella.' Cinderella—or Con, as she is called—is the victim of a conspiracy by which her real name, her place in society, and her money are filched from her. As if this is not enough, she is also entangled in the meshes of the net set by Lady Sophie de Gretton and the young men of honour and fashion, who, bored with their lives, yearn for a novelty in the way of amusement. One of them, Sir George Seaforth, makes a bet that he can make an absolutely unknown girl, if beautiful, the rage of London society; and, by a concurrence of strange chances, Con is selected as the girl to undergo the test. That Sir George wins his bet; that the 'lark' changes into something serious: that the girl he imagines and for a while treats as if she were not a lady, is really one; that he falls in love with her, after various episodes not reflecting greatly upon him as a gentleman; and that the plot to rob her of her name and fortune is unmasked at last—all these things were to be expected. And they tumble upon one another in an amazing but very entertaining manner.

Messrs. SANDS & CO.

The Man with the Parrots, a Story of Events and the Shadows they Cast, by A. Eric Bayly. Mr. Bayly won his spurs as a writer of exciting, ingeniously contrived melodrama with his 'House of Strange Secrets' and 'The Secret of Scotland Yard.' In his present venture he is as gruesome and uncanny and as readable as anyone would desire. The story opens with the advent in England of Mrs. Grayl and her daughter Vera. Years ago her husband, a bank manager in America, had been convicted of forgery on the perjured evidence of two men who bitterly hated him, and a long term of imprisonment followed. He is permitted to take two parrots with him into his jail. His wife had no home or money; she was very beautiful. A millionaire was over head and ears in love with her; if Grayl were dead she might marry again. For her sake he bribes a warder to send her a certificate of his death in the prison. The complications that ensue, the terrible sufferings of poor Grayl before death does at last come to his relief, the part the parrots play in the tragedy, and the 'love interest' that lightens the gloom of the narrative—all these go to the making of a story that is absorbing from beginning to end.

Oh! My Darling Clementine, illustrated by John Hassall, words and music by Percy Montrose. The pathetic ballad of Clementine loses nothing in the setting given to it by Mr. Hassall, rather is the tragedy of her untimely fate enhanced by his diverting pencil. Some of his pictures are coloured. All of them are droll in the extreme, and artistic into the bargain. Poor Clementine, whom the cruel river overwhelmed!

> In my dreams she still doth haunt me,
> Robed in garments soaked in brine;
> Though in life I used to hug her,
> Now she's dead, I'll draw the line.

A Child's London, by Hamish Hendry, with fourteen illustrations by Carton Moorepark. The sights of London, as they present themselves to the mind of a child, are described in smooth, flowing lines by Mr. Hendry; lines full of a dry humour, much sentiment, and a simplicity of phrasing that should endear them to little readers. The lions in Trafalgar Square pretend they cannot stand; as a matter of fact, whenever they find themselves alone down they come, and go trotting down the street, prowling about for buns.

> That is the time they shake their manes,
> That is the time these lions roar;
> Some night I'll creep here with my reins,
> And get a ride on all the four.

The full-page illustrations are very clever, full of character, and evincing a fine sense of what is typical of the streets of London. The cat's-meat man, for instance, is a triumph. The Lion-Lady guarding the Needle on the Embankment, to mention another example, is arresting in a different way. The conception is imaginative to a degree, and the sense of mystery produced is most effectively rendered.

The Runaway Puff-Puff, by Gertrude M. Bradley, illustrated. This picture book, glorious with many colours, is for the very little ones. They will laugh gleefully over the tale of the disobedient baby Puff-Puff, which, while its nurse was gossiping with an elderly Passenger-train, slid round the corner, and away, to the consternation of its parents. If it had not been for the kindness of a Polar bear, they would never have seen it again.

The Bystander, or Leaves for the Lazy, by J. Ashby-Sterry. What a refreshment is a book of essays by Mr. Ashby-Sterry! An idle hour and the company of the Lazy Minstrel—how quickly the time flies! 'The Bystander' is a tonic and a consolation; it causes us to forget for a while the worries of the day, and braces us to encounter them afresh when, far too soon, they thrust themselves upon us once again. Mr. Ashby-Sterry writes as one who lets the world wag while he takes his ease; and his whim becomes the reader's, with infinite satisfaction to the spirit. His system of philosophy—singular enough it is in these days of rush and scramble—is adumbrated in 'Before Breakfast' as well as in any of the collection. It is, of course, opposed to the Samuel Smiles idea of perfection; is impossible of realisation, indeed, except by a few choice spirits who can defy convention and live as they please. Could the ideal be attained, the Golden Age would be upon us, instead of which, we are surrounded by tubes and telephones, and even the hearses of the dead are rattled rapidly to the grave. Listen to this attack on the early riser: 'You are so puffed up with the sense of your own goodness; you are so inflated with your own industry and self-denial, that you become positively unbearable to your fellow-creatures.' But we must not tarry with this topic. Mr. Ashby-Sterry 'whitewashes' Jonas Chuzzlewit, in connection with the free sights of the Metropolis; tells us how to enjoy a Continental trip without the nuisance of travel or the spending of money; muses in a bath-chair; in many pages shows himself a good Dickensian; and, in short, has written a very delightful book.

From Helmet and Spear

Helmet and Spear, Stories from the Wars of the Greeks and Romans, by the Rev. A. J. Church, M.A. It is almost a work of supererogation to say anything about a book by Professor Church, except to recommend it without reserve. By his classic stories, so well known and so widely appreciated, he has rendered a great service to the young, acquainting them with 'the glory that was Greece, the splendour that was Rome,' in a manner at once fascinating and instructive. There are no better books to put into the hands of intelligent boys and girls, and 'Helmet and Spear,' which is well illustrated, is worthy to rank with any of its predecessors from its author's learned and brilliant pen. Again we are thrilled by Thermopylæ, and by Marathon; by the great deeds of Alexander; we follow the fortunes of Rome in her struggles against Carthage and the barbarians with breathless avidity. Professor Church believes that a definite purpose runs through human history, and these glowing narratives of heroism have this significance — they illustrate, in his opinion, that results of abiding good come out of the losses and sorrows of war. They therefore have a special interest for us to-day.

The Celestial Country, Hymns and Poems on the Joys and Glories of Paradise. This collection of some of the sweetest religious songs in the world is contained in a volume most captivating to behold. The illustrations, too, are far above the ordinary, being large full-page photographic reproductions of masterpieces by Ghirlandajo, Fra Angelico, Filippo Lippi, Benozzo Gozzoli, Bernardino Luini, Sandro Botticelli, and Carpaccio. These pictures seem naturally to belong to the poems, which include the Rhythm of Bernard of Morlaix, translated by Dr. J. Mason Neale, under the title 'The Celestial Country'; several of Milton's, Henry Vaughan's, and Newman's, with one by Spenser, and another by Cowper. A really sumptuous gift-book.

The Windfairies, and other Tales, by Mary de Morgan, with illustrations by Olive Cockerell. The art of writing for children is supposed by some to exist no longer, but every Christmas proves the contrary. If the good old fairy stories are not rivalled, yet the standard of the new ones is fairly high. The volume under notice is a very good specimen of its class—it has all the charm and mystery and magic that the children's imagination revels in. What prettier story for them than the one that gives its name to the book? Little Lucilla was the motherless child of a miller, and her greatest pleasure was to watch the sails of the windmill going round and round. One night the fairies, who make the hurricanes, and the little waves on the sea, and the gentle whispers that tremble over the fields in summer, and that set the windmill going, appear to her. They dance before her, and they teach her to dance as lightly and beautifully as they, on condition that she never tells who taught her. So Lucilla becomes the finest dancer that ever was, and when she grows up she is taken to the court of a king to dance before him. His queen is jealous of the girl's wondrous dancing, and because Lucilla will not break her word to the fairies by saying who taught her, she is treated badly, even being thrown into the sea and taken to the scaffold to be beheaded. But the fairies help her, and she at last escapes, having kept her promise all through. There are eight other stories, all as interesting and bright as this, and all are quaintly and artistically illustrated by Miss Cockerell, who wields a very clever pencil. The book may be trusted to delight children.

PULL'S FERRY, NORWICH. From Emma Marshall

Emma Marshall, a Biographical Sketch, by Beatrice Marshall. As a record of literary life, and as the story of a brave soul, this book deserves high rank—it is a tender, and in some respects a very beautiful picture of a brave, true, and strenuous life. For many years Mrs. Marshall's name has been a household word in hundreds of homes in all parts of the world. Who does not know her sweet stories of domestic life, her stories of the historic past, so faithful, so carefully wrought and delicately finished, so high and even poetic in their achievement? The days of old live again in her pages, which are redolent of noble purpose, charity, sympathy, and quiet humour. The regard in which Mrs. Marshall was held will be intensified by this biography that her daughter has given us. Sprung from Quaker stock, she was reared in tranquillity and affluence in quaint Norwich. She began to write soon after her marriage, more for relaxation than remuneration; but when the bank in which her husband was manager failed, authorship was taken up in earnest, and thenceforward it was almost literally a fight for bread. The husband ruined, there was a large family to provide for, to educate, to equip for the world; and the story of her fortitude and courage and heroic perseverance is one of the most pathetic that has been published for a long time. Amid all the gloom, she maintained her cheerfulness, her happy faith that all was for the best, and was the firmest of friends and counsellors to those in trouble. In some of her letters she laments that she can make no great 'hit' that would at a bound place her above all her difficulties; and regards wistfully the gigantic success of books like 'Called Back' and 'The Christian'; but it is on behalf of others, not for herself. She enjoyed the friendship of many distinguished men and women; and interesting are the glimpses we obtain of them in this volume. One of them was Dean Law, of Gloucester. He disliked Mr. Gladstone. The statesman happened to be in the city, and wished to see the cathedral. Instead of offering him hospitality, the Dean ordered out a conveyance, took sandwiches with him, and drove about outside Gloucester until Mr. Gladstone had departed. Had it been Disraeli, he said afterwards, he would have entertained him royally. When she was young, Mrs. Marshall met Mr. Goldwin Smith, and asked him if he had read Tennyson's 'Idylls.' 'No,' was the short reply, 'not being a young lady, I have no time to waste on sugary romance!' The volume contains several portraits, illustrations of the five cathedral cities in which Mrs. Marshall lived, and other pictures.

Messrs. JOHN F. SHAW & CO.

England's Hero Prince, a Story of the Black Prince, by Gordon Stables, M.D., C.M., illustrated. The indefatigable Dr. Gordon Stables, whose versatility is astonishing, goes to the days of Edward III. for the scene and characters of this romance. We are led from the boyhood of the Black Prince, to Cressy, Poitiers, and the other famous fights in which he distinguished himself, to the end of the life that Englishmen love to remember. Two other English heroes bear their share of whatever may be going on—Gurthie and Phil—and they have as much excitement and adventure as any boys could reasonably ask for. The book is a dashing, graphic piece of work—well calculated to arouse the spirit of youth.

From England's Hero Prince

In Cloister and Court, or the White Flower of a Blameless Life, the Story of Bishop Ken, by E. Everett-Green, illustrated. The city of Tangier, in England's hands as part of the dowry of Charles II.'s Queen, is the scene of this romance, in which the saintly Bishop Ken is the principal figure. He is as yet only Prebendary Ken, chaplain for the expedition to Tangier. He is shocked, as well he might be, at the depravity and utterly abandoned lives of his countrymen around him, and soon comes into collision with the infamous Colonel Kirke, in command of the soldiers at Tangier. His outspoken denunciation of Kirke's conduct makes the latter his bitter enemy. A plot is hatched to kill Dr. Ken, but it is frustrated just at the last moment. In time he is made Bishop of Wells, and we are subsequently in the midst of the Monmouth rebellion. After Sedgemoor the Bishop and Kirke are again in antagonism. We need not follow the story further. It presents a good picture of the period of its action and is most capably written, and its sustained elevation of tone should commend it to parents as a gift-book for their children.

The Master of Fernhurst, by E. Everett-Green, with frontispiece. When the master of Fernhurst succeeded to his inheritance he found that it had been shockingly mismanaged in the reign of the previous owner, an invalid : and he promptly dismissed the agent and his son Neil, and the latter as promptly vowed revenge. He procured a weapon with which to shoot Langdale, the 'master'; but made a mistake in his man, the victim being Dr. Gaythorne, Langdale's friend. Neil, after this exploit, retreated to Australia. Several love episodes enliven the narrative, and here also cross-currents display themselves—the people we expect to marry So-and-So declining to do such a thing, and pairing off with Somebody-Else. The conclusion brings satisfaction all round ; the story, which is religious in tone, ending as all good stories should.

The Transfiguration of Peace, by the Rev. R. C. Gillie, M.A. Taking as his text 'Peace be unto you,' Mr. Gillie writes on the blessings of peace in the soul, the family, and the nation. In the nation, he holds, peace must be transfigured before it can be really permanent. Courage, patriotism, self-sacrifice, must be transformed by 'their adaptation to the life without battlefields, beleaguered fortresses, and forlorn hopes.' He agrees with Père Gratry, that, if only all the strength, the science, the courage, the genius, the heroism, the brave blood expended in one great battle could be used in accordance with the knowledge and inspiration of God, the world would be transformed. A thoughtful book, touching on some points of war and patriotism that should be pondered.

A Comrade's Troth, by E. A. Gillie, with a frontispiece. A story of a beautiful friendship that knew no wavering, on one side at least, even when tried to the uttermost. The scene is in Scotland, the friends are Marcus Leigh and David Dunbar. Marcus, weak in moral fibre, is overcome by a craving for drink. David is a doctor, and most of his time is given to the task of trying to reclaim Marcus. He almost loses his own reputation in his attachment to his chum, and subsequently suffers as an invalid for years as the consequence of thwarting Marcus's attempt to commit suicide. Both love the same girl ;

'but David stands aside, believing she loves Marcus. It is not so, however; and this David finds out. A neatly written story, which gives an interesting picture of Scottish life.

Valour and Victory, illustrated. Twenty stories of adventure and daring exploits that happened during the war in South Africa, are here admirably told by such practised writers as Dr. Gordon Stables, C. H. Lyall, E. A. Gillie, Duncan McClaren, G. Stebbing, and Kade Chattan. Colenso, Mafeking, Ladysmith, Bloemfontein, and the other places made celebrated by the war are the scenes; and boys will be delighted with these exciting stories of pluck and prowess. The volume is very liberally and handsomely illustrated.

Little Frolic, 1900, illustrated. This annual well merits its name; full of sprightly writing, stories, anecdotes, verses, and pretty pictures. We can recommend it highly.

Our Darlings, the Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories, 1900. The twenty-sixth volume of this portly annual well keeps up the reputation of 'Our Darlings' as an excellent magazine for the young. Dr. Gordon Stables contributes a stirring serial, 'England's Hero Prince;' E. Everett-Green is responsible for another, 'Freed from Prison;' a third one is written by Mabel Mackintosh. Short stories there are in profusion. Papers on matters that appeal to the little ones are numerous; and the pictures, coloured and in black-and-white, may be counted by the score.

Sunday Sunshine, 1900, edited by Catherine Shaw. This annual contains a serial by C. H. Lyall, many instructive tales and articles, poems, and dozens of well-produced pictures, which are sure to please the small boys and girls who receive it as a Christmas present.

Mr. GEORGE STONEMAN.

Sunshine for 1900, for the Home, the School, and the World; The Sunday Friend, 1900, Vol. XXVII.; Bright Eyes, 1900, an Annual for Young Folks; Toddles, Pictures, Stories, and Recitations. These gay-looking annuals, with their coloured pictures, and other illustrations innumerable, should go straight to the hearts of the little people for whom they are intended. Serial stories, brief cheerful tales, little songs, entertaining articles, puzzles, picture story competitions are among the good things provided in such profusion. A strong religious tone runs through them all; and they are, therefore, excellently adapted for Sunday reading.

Great Thoughts from Master Minds, 1900, Vol. XXXIII., illustrated. This treasury of quotations from the poets, the historians, novelists, essayists, dramatists, scientists; of original biographies, and interviews with men and women who are doing much of the world's philanthropic and social work; of picturesque descriptive articles, and helpful papers on literary and religious subjects; maintains its high standard of usefulness in this its thirty-third volume. Besides the contents of the kind we have mentioned, there is a serial by the late Mary Linskill, 'In Exchange for a Soul,' and special pages for the children. Illustrations scattered throughout the text are supplemented by many extra large engravings after pictures by prominent artists. As a gift to a minister, a teacher, or the thoughtful youth of both sexes we can strongly recommend Great Thoughts.

The Mandarin's Kite, or Little Tsu-Foo and Another Boy, by G. E. Farrow, illustrated by Alan Wright. A book by the author of 'The Wallypug of Why' is sure of a cordial reception, and, this being accorded to 'The Mandarin's Kite' on account of its predecessor, it will secure for itself a warm place in the affections of children through its own merits. It is a 'nonsense' story of the most jocular character. Tsu-Foo, and the 'other boy,' Cyril Deane, leave the earth in an unexpected manner. A huge kite, instead of being held down by them, draws them up. Higher and higher they go, and even when the string breaks they continue to ascend, until they land on a planet called Pars, as the inhabitants declare. When the boys say that they had heard of one named Mars they are informed the two have quarrelled, and Mars had moved further off. Strange are the people and things the boys see; fantastic are their adventures; entrancing is the story wherein everything that happened is related. Mr. Alan Wright's pictures add considerably to the fun of the book, which is one bound to become a prime favourite with children.

A Poor Buffer, a Story for Young People, by Helen Savile, with illustrations by Nancy Ruxton. This story, the author says, is written for young people, but we are sure that those 'grown-ups' lucky enough to get hold of it will feel more than grateful to Mrs. Savile. It is a very beautiful piece of work, the only fault of which is that it is too short. Imagination, power, and style, and humour and pathos, all are to be found in this idyll of Irish life. We are taken to the wild, desolate coast of Donegal, where stands the Castle Camolin. Here live the orphans, little Molly and Paul, children of a baronet whose loss of his wife had broken his heart. A stern old aunt looks after them. They are the most delightful, lovable children we have met for many a day. Paul, repentant after one of his escapades, writes a letter, with Molly's help, to send to their mother, asking her to think of a way to make him good. How to get the letter to Heaven puzzles him; then he has the inspiration to tie it to the tail of an enormous kite. As soon as the kite gets into the clouds they will ask God to pull it up into Heaven, and tell an angel to cut the letter off, and give it to their mother. Then there is Dan, the wild, devoted lad who is in the Lancers and had fought in the Soudan. Between him and Molly springs up a friendship, which excites the fatal jealousy of Nance, his cousin, in love with him. How death comes to poor Dan, his life being sacrificed for Molly, is vividly and powerfully told. An impressive little book, which should much advance Mrs. Savile's reputation.

The Adventures of Tod with and without Betty, by S. Cardella. Just the book for boys and girls not yet superior to fairy stories. It contains eight fairy tales, told with grace and humour and fancy. And there is human interest in them, too, and a love of nature. Tod appears in the first story, from which we find that he, a little fellow of seven, wants to be a man all at once, and starts off to find out from his friends how this can be accomplished. They—the birds, cows, trees, flowers—tell him many things, and he learns that to become really a man is a harder task than he had imagined. Photographs take the place of black-and-white drawings, and the effect is not very pleasing.

From The Adventures of Tot with and without Betty

King Helge, Aslog, by Frederick I. Winbolt. Two short dramas based upon the Norse Sagas. Mr. Winbolt has departed somewhat from the original legends, and his version reads smoothly, if tamely. There is little force in his blank verse, and less dramatic action. All the characters indulge in long speeches and platitudes. There is none of the vigour and glamour of the old Norse legends, but plenty of moral. We are reminded of nothing so much as of the tedious dramas of the eighteenth century, which sent their tired audiences to sleep.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN.

From The Home of Santa Claus

The Home of Santa Claus, by George A. Best, illustrated from photographs by Arthur Ullyett. The story of Leslie Gordon's visit to Father Christmas, and of the strange sights he beheld in the town of Toys, is divertingly told, and should please vastly the happy little mortals to whom it is given as a present. The dozens of photographs are an additional delight.

Edward Barry (South Sea Pearler), by Louis Becke. 'A wild, blustering day in Sydney, the Queen City of the Southern Seas. Since early morn a keen, cutting, sleet-laden westerly gale had been blowing . . . and churning the blue waters of the harbour into a white seethe of angry foam as it swept outwards to the wide Pacific.' Looking at the ships in one of the little bays was Edward Barry, a young fellow whose fortunes at the moment were as bad as the day. He is a seaman without a ship. But his luck is turning. The skipper of the Mahina comes along; he is in want of a first mate, and Barry occupies that position on board the brig in a few hours. The destination of the ship is a great pearl-fishery. Rawlings, the skipper, has become possessed of the secret of the place by fraud and murder, and as the ship sails merrily along we are in the thick of intrigue, plots for further murders, and scoundrelism of the worst kind. Barry comports himself as a brave English sailor, and the time comes when Fortune opens her arms wide to him. A strong, moving, exciting story, enjoyable in every page.

Trinity Bells, a Tale of Old New York, by Amelia E. Barr, illustrated by C. M. Relyea. This is the New York of President Adams, when Dutch was heard almost as frequently as English in the homes of the old families. Catherine Van Clyffe's life moves in unison, as it were, with the bells; they cheer her when misfortune comes upon her father; they give her hope; they rejoice with her when happiness is restored; in every crisis of her life they are heard, and with controlling power. Captain Van Clyffe has the ill-luck to fall into the clutches of the Dey of Algiers, and is made a slave. A chance visitor to his house in New York explains why he has been so long away from home; and his son Paul does not rest until he is again a free man. Some very good pictures ornament the volume; some music is included; and 'Trinity Bells' is really a pleasant book for girls.

From 'Tales told in the Zoo'

The Paris Salons of 1900. This handsome volume contains full-page reproductions of ninety-three of the best pictures shown in Paris this year by the first French artists of the day. It should find a place in many drawing-rooms. The reproductions are excellently done, and beneath each picture there is a description which is pithy and to the point. The subjects treated are very varied, though scenes connected with war, particularly with the campaigns of Napoleon, preponderate.

From 'The Handy Man Afloat and Ashore'

Tales Told in the Zoo, by F. Carruthers Gould and F. H Carruthers Gould, illustrated by 'F.C.G.' The birds at the Zoo decided to form a society, to meet once a week at midnight, weather and the keepers permitting. After a lot of wrangling, they elected Methuselah, the adjutant bird, their president. The question then arose what should they do, what should they debate? They compromised matters by asking Methuselah to tell them stories, and this volume contains what he told. More would have been given to the world had not the secretary bird, who took shorthand notes, set up a claim to copyright, on the plea that his reporting of the tales made him the author of them. Methuselah explained how the great ant-eater was made, why the blackbird is black, how the hoopoes got their crowns, and many other puzzles, narrates legends of kings, and of kings' daughters turned into birds, and the story of Tehi the Sorceress, and of the Campanero, the church bell in the forest, and much more besides—all in a very dignified manner, as befits so solemn and so old a bird. But he makes us laugh heartily at times, and is pathetic at others, and we hope he will defy the secretary bird and give us some more stories like these. The pictures are by F. C. G.—what more need be said about them?

The Handy Man Afloat and Ashore, by the Rev. G. Goodenough, R.N., illustrated. What the Rev. E. J. Hardy did for the soldier in his book 'Mr. Thomas Atkins,' Mr. Goodenough essays for the sailor in this companion volume. It is a book 'all about the Navy,' containing chapters on the Greenwich Hospital School (the cradle of the Navy), the naval training service, the routine of a man-of-war, torpedo instruction, sailors' homes, rests, and institutes, &c.—in fact, everything that can be told about the 'handy man' in his official capacity. But the book, happily, goes much further than this; it enters into the life of Jack Tar; tells us how he lives and moves; what are his diversions, his prejudices, his songs; describes his modes of speech; his oddities—gives us the man as he is, and very attractive and diverting is the picture. There are lots of good stories in the book. The following conversation between two men of the Naval Brigade, stationed in 1884 at Fort Baker, Trinkitat, near Suakim, was overheard: 'Well, Bill, I don't think we shall be long out of this fort afore we're back again!' 'For my part,' said his chum, 'I expects to get a medal for suspicious gallantry.' From Mr. Goodenough's list of ships and the sailors' equivalents for them much amusement may be drawn: Agamemnon becomes 'Eggs and bacon'; Polyphemus, 'Polly Infamous'; Atalanta, 'Hat and lantern'; Immortalité, 'Immortalight'; Niobe, 'Nobby', Ariadne, 'Hairy Annie'; Bellerophon, 'Billy Ruffin'; Téméraire, 'Trim yer 'air,' and so on. This is a capital book, which should be perused by all interested in the Navy and the 'handy man.'

The Art Journal, New Series, 1900, illustrated. This annual makes a magnificent gift-book, full as it is of beautiful etchings, other full-page illustrations, and hundreds of pictures in the text. The volume is indeed a possession to rejoice over; it will bring delight at every opening of its pages, be a constant joy to the owner. Where there is so much to praise in the illustrations, it is invidious to make distinctions; but perhaps it is permissible to point out the original etching by David Law, 'On the Thames, near Cookham,' as eminently desirable in itself, and as an example of skill in reproduction. The reproduction after Whistler's picture, 'The Piano,' is also remarkable. The articles cover the whole province of art, from altar frontals to electric lighting fittings; from pictures to embroidery; pottery to the decoration of restaurants; technical criticism to home arts and industries. The Art Journal has no superior as a pictorial record of the time, and the illustrations are admirably produced.

THE SETTING OF THE SUN. From The Art Journal

Messrs. JOHN WALKER & CO.

The Diaries published by Messrs. John Walker & Co. are so widely known and so highly appreciated that we need do little more than announce that another year's supply is ready. Wherever business men congregate, there the value of these wonderful diaries is acknowledged in the most practical way. It seems indeed superfluous to praise them, for they are really in the exalted position of classics: they have passed beyond the region of criticism and the reach of the critic. We may remark, however, that this year all the excellent old features are repeated. The Loop Diaries are not merely things of utility, but also things of beauty and a certain joy to all who require such note-books. The get-up—and no man of taste likes to put an ill-made diary in his pocket—is all that the most fastidious could desire. Paper, print, and binding are alike good, and each diary contains just such postal and other information as the busy man is likeliest to need. The larger Desk Diary is also in all points excellent—as excellent indeed as might be expected from the high reputation of the firm which issues it. To those who have been in the habit of using Messrs. Walker's diaries commendation is unnecessary; but to such as do not know them—if there be such people—they are to be most cordially commended.

From Grimm's Fairy Tales.

Grimm's Fairy Tales, complete edition, translated by Beatrice Marshall, illustrated. A very handsome edition of the immortal stories is this under notice. There are plenty of good pictures, and all the stories are included. If there are any children who have been so neglected as never to have heard or read these enchanting tales, the omission that robs them of such dear delights should be immediately repaired; and here is the edition for them.

Love in our Village, by Orme Agnus, illustrated by Bertha Newcombe. Mr. Agnus's first book, 'Jan Oxber,' achieved a very real and justly-deserved success. Certainly it was a work of strength—of absolute sincerity. But it was somewhat of a mistake to compare it, as was done in more than one place, with the masterpieces of Thomas Hardy and George Eliot, with an implication that in the comparison it did not suffer. Very little good can come of this kind of hyperbole, and much injury might easily be caused in the case of a young writer. As regards Mr. Agnus, it is uncalled for; he has individuality; he is already master of himself in the use of his materials; and the only resemblance he bears to Mr. Hardy is that he also writes of the Wessex made immortal by the author of 'The Return of the Native.' These short stories, 'Love in our Village,' will add to his reputation. They are vastly clever, piquant, dramatic; the rustics are drawn down to the bootlace, and their hearts and thoughts are revealed with the intimacy and fidelity that can come only from profound knowledge and sympathy. In an interesting introduction Mr. Agnus contends that life in the village, for those who have eyes to see it, is a palpitating drama, and beneath the idyllic village are the elemental passions of mankind—the seven deadly sins are no peculiar product of the city. So he proves in these stories, which everyone should read. The book will keep any reader quiet for an hour.

Messrs. FREDERICK WARNE & CO.

Kings of the Sea, a Story of the Spanish Main, by Hume Nisbet, with original illustrations by J. B. Greene. Mr. Nisbet gives us a rollicking story of ocean rangers, Spanish galleons, golden doubloons, ducats, pistoles, and pieces of eight, hidden treasure, battles, and British pluck. It is all very brisk, very entertaining; hard blows are given and received by the pirates and the honest fellows who pursue them, seeking their ill-got gains and the application of retributive justice. D'Arcy Driscoll is the boy-hero, and the time is the period of 1715 and the attempts to substitute the Pretender for King George. Bravely the flag with the skull and cross-bones upon it flaunts in the breeze, and piracy, the cause of the Pretender, and the might of King George are mixed up together. All concerned in this spirited story are happy only when danger hovers over them, and all get their deserts in the end. Mr. Nisbet writes as if in love with his subject, and boys will be enchanted with 'Kings of the Sea.' Its moral is unimpeachable.

Nonsense Songs, by Edward Lear, with drawings by L. Leslie Brooke. 'Nonsense Songs' is not nearly so well known as the author's hugely popular 'Book of Nonsense,' but some there be who esteem the work even more highly than its more favoured companion. 'Nonsense Songs' has not the sameness of the latter; it is quite as nonsensical, humorous, frivolous, delightful. Here is a specimen of its quality:

The Owl and the Pussy-cat went to sea
In a beautiful pea green boat,
They took some honey, and plenty of money
Wrapped up in a five-pound note.
The Owl looked up to the stars above,
And sang to a small guitar,
'O lovely Pussy! O Pussy, my love,
'What a beautiful Pussy you are,
'You are,
'You are!
'What a beautiful Pussy you are!'

This new edition is decked out very smartly; and of the illustrations it is enough to say that they are worthy to appear side by side with Mr. Lear's work.

The Jumblies, and other Nonsense Verses, by Edward Lear, illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. This is a selection from 'Nonsense Songs,' containing ten prime favourites. To those who cannot afford the 'Nonsense Songs' we say: Get this selection.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF MY UNCLE ARTY

Gobbo Bobo, The Two-eyed Griffin, by H. Escott-Inman, with original illustrations by E. A. Mason. Gobbo Bobo is the famous griffin who sits on his throne just outside the palace of the very wise owls, and keeps guard over our great London town. All London children know him. But they don't know that when the clock of Big Ben strikes thirteen and Gog and Magog go to dinner he gets down, and then curious things happen. In all the adventures little Trixie, who has been lost, is concerned. We have large additions made to our knowledge of London and the doings of a lot of singular creatures of whom we never heard before, by this book, which is a very merry volume, merrily illustrated.

The Bunkum Book, a Topsy Turvy Tale, by Aubrey Hopwood, illustrated by Maud Trelawny.

A railway rules from Anywhere
To Topsy Turvy Land,
Where trees have roots that grow in air,
And branches in the sand;

The skies are green instead of blue,
And happy people frown;
For every single thing they do
Is always upside down.

To remedy this unfortunate condition of affairs the natives of Topsy Turvy are advised by the wise man Goggles that they require an Antidote, which is a weasel that must be caught asleep. So he reads in the Bunkum Book; and there's no contradicting that. Three bold men have to travel for ten years and a day to snare the wondrous beast. Goggles and Puffy and Gaby, the idiot of the land, venture on the eventful journey, and strange are their adventures. The verses are very smart, full of vim and jollity, and the coloured pictures are deliciously funny.

Hunting for Gold, or Adventures in Klondyke, by Hume Nisbet, illustrated by Hal Hurst. Mr. Nisbet is now a veteran as a writer of first-class stories for boys, and his last story, 'Hunting for Gold,' is sure of a warm welcome. It is a strong story, with plenty of animation, and full of stirring occurrences. There is true realism in the account of the overland journey to Dawson City. If we multiply, Mr. Nisbet says, the coldest day we have ever known in England, or try to intensify the most bitter ice-blast that has ever pierced our marrow a thousand-fold, even then we shall fail to realise spring in the Chilkoot Canyon, far less midwinter on the Klondyke. But, in following Mr. Nisbet's gold-hunters, we have the horrors of their journey borne in upon us in a striking manner, and 'Hunting for Gold' is a book altogether creditable to his talent. That Hal Hurst has supplied the illustrations is sufficient guarantee of their quality.

Travels by the Fireside, a Book for the Winter Evenings, by Gordon Stables, M.D., C.M., illustrations by Gordon Browne. Winter evenings will pass pleasantly for those possessing this very engaging book. It is a boy's book, but it is equally suitable for girls, and people of more mature age will find much in it of an agreeable kind. The author says that nature and he have always been 'pals' and shipmates, and evidence of the companionship is seen on every page. Some of his descriptions, especially of Scottish scenery, are very good indeed. The first part of the volume is devoted to incidents and stories whose setting is in Scotland; in the second we roam 'through jungle, peak, and plain' in Africa and India; in the third, we are in 'wild West lands.' Of all these, some strange, terrible, pathetic, or exciting story is told. 'Travels by the Fireside' contains as good a collection of stories as we have read for some time, and we trust it will be as popular as it deserves. The illustrations by Gordon Browne should contribute much to its success.

All children love to dabble with colours, and try to paint pictures, and to produce portraits of the household cat or dog. Messrs. Warne issue two little books that cannot fail to amuse them. They are the Paint Box, a Painting Book of Toys, and the Palette Painting Book, of animals, ships, flowers, furniture, and a lot of other things. Palettes of real colours go with each, and there are simple directions how to use them. For very young children these volumes seem to us admirably suited.

THE OWL AND THE PUSSY CAT. From Nonsense Songs

Messrs. F. V. WHITE & CO.

A Magic Garden, and other Stories, by Cecil Medlicott, with illustrations by E. Fairhurst. Fourteen fairy tales, telling of naughty children who were punished for their naughtiness by a mysterious little man—of a red slipper chosen to be king; of brave youths setting out to marry princesses; of animals that speak; of wizards, fairies, and elves; and of a river that took a sad little boy to rest. All very pleasantly written, very well illustrated. 'A Magic Garden' would be a nice gift for good little children.

War—and Arcadia, by Bertram Mitford, with frontispiece by A. Wallis Mills. A thrilling story of Indians, of rolling plains, 'dug-outs,' scalp-hunting, danger, and fighting. 'The Sioux are out,' and the faces of women grow pale, and men clutch their weapons, and the struggle commences. All the Indians are not bad. Two of them dare the vengeance of their countrymen, and save the white lad, Kennion. After all their perils, most of the people we become acquainted with meet at the second Wild West Show at Earl's Court, and live their adventures over again. A dashing story is 'War—and Arcadia.'

Great Story, 'KIM,' begins in the JANUARY NUMBER, price 6d.,

of

'CASSELL'S MAGAZINE'

The dawn of a new century will find Cassell's Magazine occupying a higher place among the leading magazines of the world than it has ever occupied before.

Nothing has been more remarkable in a year noted for its adverse effect on literary production than the steady growth in public favour and increase in circulation of Cassell's Magazine, and the Editor has now secured a feature for the new year which will undoubtedly cause an immensely increased demand for the Magazine throughout the British Empire.

In securing the rights of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's brilliant serial, 'Kim,' for Cassell's Magazine, Messrs. Cassell & Co. have effected an arrangement which will mark an epoch in the history of a periodical which has a unique record.

The story is probably the most characteristic work from Mr. Kipling's pen. It is by far the longest its author has ever written, and readers are likely to be unanimous in the opinion that it is also the best.

The illustrations will be by Mr. Lockwood Kipling, Mr. E. L. Weeks, and Mr. H. R. Millar. Mr. Kipling's illustrations are modelled in clay relief and then reproduced. They are of unique interest.

Those who wish to possess copies of Cassell's Magazine containing 'Kim' should give their orders forthwith.

On Jan. 23, 1901

Will be published Part 1. price 6d.

of the CENTURY EDITION of Cassell's

Illustrated History of England

1.—The CENTURY EDITION will be brought down to the dawn of the 20th Century.

2.—It will contain a series of authentic Coloured Plates, Portraits, Maps, &c., expressly executed for this issue.

3.—The CENTURY EDITION will be printed on superior paper.

4.—It will be by far the most valuable edition ever issued of this unique publication.

The inquiries for particulars of this edition are already larger than for any previous issue, and thus an immense demand is anticipated. Early in January specimens of the Coloured Plates will be sent to the trade throughout the Empire, and orders are now being registered by all booksellers.

NOVELS OF THE SEASON

THIRD IMPRESSION. Crown 8vo. 6*s*. With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER.

ELEANOR. By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD,

Author of 'Robert Elsmere,' 'Marcella,' 'Sir George Tressady,' &c.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—'"Eleanor" is worthy of its dedication, as its author's artistic masterpiece. . . . Few English novels of note are so signally free from redundancies as this; and in yet fewer has a story of deep human interest been so lightly at once or so firmly, if we may use the expression, built up out of itself. This time, at least, Mrs. Ward has found a theme which she has been able to treat from first to last harmoniously, and without swerving into the thicket, and which she has brought to a tragic close without a harsh or cruel dissonance. . . . The spell which Mrs. Humphry Ward has cast over more than a decade of contemporary thought and feeling will not be broken by this nobly conceived and brilliantly executed work.'

THE BRASS BOTTLE

By

F. ANSTEY,

Author of 'Vice-Versa,' 'The Giant's Robe,' 'A Fallen Idol,' &c.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

With a Frontispiece.

Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

PUNCH. 'For weirdness of conception, for skilful treatment, and for abounding humour, Mr. Anstey's last, my Baronite avers, is a worthy companion of his first ("Vice-Versa").'

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—'A charming extravaganza. Second to none of Mr. Anstey's impossible stories. . . . "The Brass Bottle" deserves every kind of success.'

SKETCH.—'Altogether delightful. To my thinking the author of "Vice-Versa" has come nearer to repeating his original success than any had thought likely. "The Brass Bottle" ought to be the most popular gift-book of the season.'

ELEANOR

(Frontispiece to Mrs. Humphry Ward's New Novel)

THE ISLE OF UNREST

By

HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

Author of 'The Sowers,' 'In Kedar's Tents,' 'Roden's Corner,' &c.

THIRD IMPRESSION.

Wtth 6 full-page Illustrations.

Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

TIMES.—'Capital reading, absorbing reading. . . . An exciting story with "thrills" every third page.'

GUARDIAN.—'Altogether charming, serious yet gay, wholesome and manly, fresh and full of interesting incident.'

MORNING POST.—'A really admirable novel, vigorous and vivid, artistic in conception and execution, with an ingenious plot, and with characters of flesh and blood, whose doings we follow with eagerness. . . . It is the sort of tale for which the reader neglects everything until he has finished it.'

A DAUGHTER OF THE FIELDS. By KATHARINE TYNAN. Author of 'The Dear Irish Girl,' 'She Walks in Beauty,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

LOVE IN A MIST. By OLIVE BIRRELL, Author of 'The Ambition of Judith,' 'Anthony Langavel,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

THE MAN-TRAP. By Sir WILLIAM MAGNAY, Bart., Author of 'The Pride of Life,' 'The Heiress of the Season,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

THE MARBLE FACE. By G. COLMORE, Author of 'A Daughter of Music,' 'The Strange Story of Hester Wynne,' &c. Second Impression. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

LITERATURE.—'A sustained work of much vividness and power. . . . The lady of the marble face is admirably drawn.'
DAILY TELEGRAPH.—'It says no little for the author's ability to hold the attention of his reader that our interest in the weird tragedy is never slackened.'

IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Reminiscences of Oxford.

By the Rev. W. TUCKWELL, M.A. With 16 Full-page Illustrations. 9s.

CONTENTS.

Chapter I.—Oxford in the Thirties; Chapter II.—Original Characters; Chapter III.—Prescientific Science; Chapter IV.—Scientific Science; Chapter V.—Æsculapius in the Thirties; Chapter VI.—Calliope in the Thirties; Chapter VII.—Undergraduates in the Thirties; Chapter VIII.—More about Undergraduates; Chapter IX.—Summa Papaverum Capita: Christchurch; Chapter X.—Magdalen and New College; Chapter XI.—Oriel; Chapter XII—Balliol; Chapter XIII.—Pattison, Thomson, Goulburn, William Sewell; Chapter XIV.—Walk about Zion.

This book gives a most interesting insight into Oxford "Varsity" life as it was from the early "Thirties" to the "Fifties." The author, during his career at the University, came in contact with some of the leading men of that time, and the work teems with personal anecdotes of such men as MAX MÜLLER, Dr. PUSEY, Dr. JOWETT, LEWIS CARROLL, Cardinal NEWMAN, Dr. ARNOLD, &c.

Campaign Pictures of the War in South Africa (1899-1900). Letters from the Front. By A. G. HALES. 6s.

This work consists of the letters addressed to the Daily News by Mr. A. G. Hales during the South African Campaign. No letters which have appeared have excited such vivid and widespread interest as the picturesque and stirring productions of Mr. Hales, and from all parts of the United Kingdom their publication in a complete form has been called for. In Australia, where Mr. Hales's reputation is a matter of pride, the letters have been constantly quoted and dwelt upon

CHARLES WORDSWORTH.
From the Drawing by G. Richmond, R.A.

"The Shop": The Story of the Royal Military Academy.

By Capt. GUGGISBERG, R.E. With numerous Illustrations and Full-page Coloured Plates, 12s. 6d. net.

The story of "The Shop" is here set forth for the first time for the general reader. Even in times of peace, Captain Guggisberg's interesting and entertaining narrative, illustrated as it is by numerous admirable photographs and artistically executed coloured plates, would have received a warm welcome from that large public which has special reasons for being interested in the Royal Military Academy, through having had friends and relatives trained within its historic walls. But in these days of war, when the British soldier has taken the centre of the stage, this record of the Training College of our R.E.'s and R.A.'s will appeal keenly to a still wider audience. No more opportune moment could have been chosen for its publication.

Our Bird Friends.

By R. KEARTON, F.Z.S., Author of "Wild Life at Home," "With Nature and a Camera," etc. With 100 Illustrations from Photographs by C. KEARTON. 5s.

"Our Bird Friends" is a thoroughly popular and entertaining account of the most curious characteristics and interesting habits of our wild birds at home amidst their natural surroundings. It deals with the wonders of feathers and flight; remarkable nests of different styles of architecture; eggs, and the value of their shape, size, colour, and numbers; the care and protection of young; feeding habits; and remarkable songs and call notes. Although specially written in a manner that brings it within the full comprehension of young people, it will be read by their elders with equal interest and every chance of increasing their store of knowledge.

A special feature of the work is that it will contain a fine series of illustrations, photographed direct from nature by the author's brother, Mr. CHERRY KEARTON.

Pictures from China. By Mrs. BISHOP, F.R.G.S. (Isabella Bird). With 60 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author, and Notes. 3s. 6d.

The Tale of a Field Hospital.

By FREDERICK TREVES, F.R.C.S. Printed in red and black, and handsomely bound in leather. With 14 Illustrations. 6s.

"Mr. Treves, who has seen, easily surpasses Zola, who had only inquired, and as a picture of war this 'tale' may almost rank with 'The Red Badge of Courage.'"—Athenæum

"Mr. Treves' moving tale is not all of the horrors of war, either; it has its humorous side also. Above all, it is superbly human and thoroughly English. Therefore, it is one of the most refreshing of books."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW SERIAL PUBLICATIONS.

"At this approach of a New Century, when so much more will be required of all who desire to get on in the world, every young man and young woman will do well to study the carefully revised and up-to-date edition of CASSELL'S POPULAR EDUCATOR. In view of the extended facilities for primary education, it has been reconstructed on a much broader basis than was its earlier form, and anybody can obtain from its clear and concise pages a comprehensive grasp of the classics, modern languages, and the sciences."—Lloyd's News.

New Issue, in Weekly Parts, price 6d., of Cassell's Popular Educator.

A Complete Encyclopædia of Elementary and Advanced Education. Illustrated throughout, and containing a Valuable Series of Maps and Plates printed in Colours.

"It would be difficult to over-estimate the enormous benefits which have been derived by the English reading public from so universally valuable a work as CASSELL'S POPULAR EDUCATOR. Over a million copies of the work are already in circulation, exercising their educative influence in as many homes. And now Messrs. Cassell are conferring further favours upon the public by re-issuing the publication in 32 Sixpenny Weekly Parts. A sound commercial education was never more urgently needed than at the present time, and if our youth are to compete successfully with the youth of foreign nations they must continue and perfect their education long after leaving school. CASSELL'S POPULAR EDUCATOR offers them the best and most easily available means of equipping themselves for the battle against foreign competition.—Daily Mail.

Particulars of the Educational Scheme will be found in Part 15, ready January 10*th*, 1901.

The Educational Times says:—"Our notice of a work so interesting must necessarily be very imperfect. We have twice essayed to write the notice, and have become so absorbed in the work as to read on for hours forgetful of our object. It is a story of boundless interest and of exquisite beauty."

MAURUS JÓKAI'S FAMOUS NEW NOVEL.

First and Second Editions Exhausted. THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

The Day of Wrath

By DR. MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN. With charming New Photogravure of Jókai.

'It is as barbaric, outrageous, and grand a book as could be imagined, even from the pen of Jókai. There is no novel in which Jókai's all-round forcefulness and daring wealth of colour are more terrific.'
PALL MALL GAZETTE.

CURTIS YORKE'S NEW NOVEL.

Carpathia Knox

By CURTIS YORKE. 6s.

AUTHOR OF 'ONCE,' 'DUDLEY,' 'THAT LITTLE GIRL,' &c.

The story treats of an idyllic saunter through Northern Spain by a charming quartette. The manners and customs of Asturias are faithfully and amusingly presented in the author's brisk, fresh style.

'Lively and entertaining; her pictures of Spanish life are very graphic.'
DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

AN EXCITING ROMANCE OF VIRGINIA.

Vivian of Virginia

Being the Memoirs of our First Rebellion by John Vivian, of Middle Plantation, Virginia.

By HULBERT FULLER. 6s.

With ten charming Illustrations by FRANK T. MERRILL.

'There is not a dull moment in the quaintly written story, adventure following adventure, holding the reader in thrall, whilst the love interest is fully sustained.'—GENTLEWOMAN.

FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.

A Woman's Burden

By FERGUS HUME. 6s.

AUTHOR OF 'THE MYSTERY OF A HANSOM CAB,' 'THE LONE INN,' &c.

Written in Fergus Hume's most thrilling style, it is an exciting novel from first to last. For originality of plot, the weaving and unweaving of its threads, striking situations, and bright descriptive dialogue, surpasses most of his latter works.

SECOND EDITION. By a Popular Hungarian Author.

St. Peter's Umbrella

By KÁLMÁN MIKSZÁTH. 6s.

With Introduction by R. NISBET BAIN. A fine Photogravure Portrait of the Author and three charming Illustrations.

'The freshness, geniality, high spirits, and humour of Mikszáth make him a fascinating companion. His peasants and priests, Jews, and gentlefolk are amazingly human. Mikszáth is a born storyteller. His gaiety is always unforced. His style abounds in whimsical touches.'—SPECTATOR.

A STORY OF LIFE AMONG THE DUTCH AMERICANS.

The Gray House of the Quarries

By MARY H. NORRIS. 6s.

With Etched Frontispiece by EDMOND H. GARRETT.

'The character of Susanna is a splendid study. No person who takes up the book can resist its fascination. The author has considerable descriptive power, and tells a pleasant story.'
WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

'The best fictional work from her fluent pen that has hitherto come under our notice. A delightful romance.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A STORY DRAWN FROM LIFE.

On Sea and Prairie

THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF A NORFOLK CARRIER.

TOLD BY HIMSELF.

By COLEMAN.

Charmingly illustrated by Mr. J. B. GREEN.

3s. 6d.

'His experiences are retailed in a simple, effective style. Rarely indeed outside the realms of fiction are such surprising adventures to be met with.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A CHARMING GIFT-BOOK.

Christ in Sacred Art

By JOSEPH LEWIS FRENCH.

Uniform with 'The Madonna in Art,' 'Love in Art,' &c. Crown 8vo. gilt top, 6s.

With 33 Full-page Reproductions from Paintings by the Great Masters.

NEW STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF 'JONATHAN MERLE.'

Honor Greenleaf

By ELIZABETH BOYD BAYLY,

Author of 'Jonathan Merle,' 'Alfreda Holme,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

'Told with insight and sympathy, there is much about the book that is blythe and humorous, and life at a health resort on the Riviera is depicted with vividness and humour.'—DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

A STIRRING STORY OF ADVENTURE.

The Young Woodranger

A STORY OF THE PIONEERS OF THE DEBATABLE GROUND

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Although based strictly on historical facts, the book is an interesting and exciting tale of adventure. Among the historical characters that figure prominently in the story are Johnny Stark, afterwards the famous General Stark, and Bob Rangers, who became the leaders of the celebrated 'Rogers Rangers.'

J. NISBET & Co.'s CHRISTMAS LIST

NON SEQUITUR. By Miss M. E. COLERIDGE, Author of 'The King with Two Faces' &c. Daintily bound, extra crown 8vo. 6s.

'It is hard in truth to render the due meed of praise to the delicate grace of phrasing, the large suggestiveness, and the happy choice of illustrative fact or quotation which make the reading of these sketches a joy.'—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

FROISSART IN BRITAIN. By HENRY NEWBOLT. With 24 Full-page Illustrations taken from Originals in the British Museum. Large crown 8vo. 6s.

'A wholly delightful volume for boys of all ages.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'These old records have a charm entirely their own, and more interest will be won by them than could ever be secured by a modern writer dealing with the same topics. . . . One of the most attractive gift-books of the season.'—YORKSHIRE POST.

Novels and Stories.

THE JOURNAL OF A JEALOUS WOMAN. By PERCY WHITE. Extra crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'Filled in with all the deft inventiveness and literary grace that have made Percy White's novels of fashionable life uniquely attractive.'
DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

'Another clever picture of modern London Society.'
ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

'Mr. White has caught delightfully and painfully the spirit of courteous comedy in which modern tragedy is played.'
DAILY CHRONICLE.

THE FLOWER OF THE FLOCK: a Novel. By W. E. NORRIS. Extra crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'Mr. Norris has given us a very clever, highly finished study.'
PALL MALL GAZETTE.

'Brightly written, natural and interesting.'—TRUTH.

'An excellent story, very brightly and cleverly told.'—SCOTSMAN.

WAGES: a Temperance Story. By L. T. MEADE. Extra crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'A story at once brave, graphic, and tenderly pitiful. It will warn many who will take the warning in time, and in some homes it will be worth more than its weight in gold.'—METHODIST TIMES.

IN THE YEAR OF WATERLOO: a Story for Boys. By O. V. CAINE, Author of 'Face to Face with Napoleon.' With Eight Illustrations by CHRIS. HAMMOND. Extra crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

'"Face to Face with Napoleon" was one of the best books of the season last year, and Mr. O. V. Caine has made a big bid for equal pride of place this year with "In the Year of Waterloo." . . . The whole leads up with much excellent dialogue and skilled word-painting to the great day of Waterloo. . . . The story of the battle is graphically sketched, and is a stirring conclusion to a capital story.'—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

THE GRIM HOUSE: a Tale for Girls. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo.

'In "The Grim House" Mrs. Molesworth's well-known story-telling powers are seen at their best. The book is attractively written, and the intense interest of the mystery is sustained until the last chapter.'
DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

THE VALIANT RUNAWAYS: a Book of Stirring Adventure for Boys. By GERTRUDE ATHERTON. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

'A most exhilarating book.'—SPEAKER.

ON WAR'S RED TIDE: a Story of the Boer War. By GORDON STABLES, R.N. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo. 5*s*.

'A capital boy's tale of the war in South Africa, in which some of the principal struggles of the campaign are vividly described.'

COMPLETE LIST ON APPLICATION.

London: CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY, Salisbury Square, E.C.

London Agent: R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON, 8 York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

Messrs. GOWANS & GRAY, Glasgow, beg to announce the publication of the first volumes of a new series of high-class reprints entitled containing the entire works of standard authors in monthly volumes of about 250 pages, uniformly printed on fine paper from new type, and neatly bound in cloth. Size—foolscap 8vo.

THE COMPLETE LIBRARY

This series is an attempt to combine the excellencies of the best library editions with the cheapness of ordinary reprints.

The high standard at which we are aiming in this undertaking will be evident from the following particulars :—

I. Scope of the Series.

The 'Complete Library' will contain: (a) The works of those authors who have become standard in our own or in foreign literatures. In the case of such writers all their known works will be included, and these will be perfectly unabridged and complete. Their letters will also be given in collections as complete as possible. (b) Miscellaneous books, such as memoirs, diaries, collections of fugitive poetry, plays, ballads, &c., which are worthy of preservation either because of their intrinsic merit or from their importance in relation to the development of any national literature or to the movements of the times in which they were written.

The collection will therefore consist solely of books of permanent value, which can never go out of date, and it will thus be possible for all, by an almost imperceptible expenditure, to accumulate gradually a library of which every volume will be always worthy of its place on the shelves.

II. The Text.

The special feature of these editions will be the care which will be taken with the texts. All the different readings, without exception, which are found in the authoritative editions (or manuscripts as the case may be) will be given, and so arranged that the student will be able to reconstruct with perfect exactness the actual text of any of these editions.

In the case of foreign authors, this great degree of accuracy in regard to the various readings of the text is not considered necessary, but the translations adopted will be of the best, and the particular edition which is followed will be mentioned.

III. The Editor.

Each author will be edited by a high authority on the subject, who will also write a concise introductory biography.

IV. In Conclusion.

Where necessary notes, glossaries, indices, &c., will be added, and every effort will be made to make these

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF JOHN KEATS

Including his Letters.

Edited by = H. BUXTON FORMAN.

IN FIVE MONTHLY VOLUMES.

1/- each volume net

Leather Binding, gilt top, 2/- net.

THIS will be the most complete edition of Keats yet published, as since the appearance of Mr. Forman's large library edition, fresh manuscripts have come to light of 'Hyperion,' 'Isabella or the Pot of Basil,' 'The Eve of St. Agnes,' the 'Ode to a Nightingale,' the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn,' the 'Lines on the Mermaid Tavern,' the 'Lines on Robin Hood,' the 'Ode to Autumn,' the 'Ode to Melancholy,' the 'Lines written in the Highlands,' 'The Eve of St. Mark,' 'Otho the Great,' and 'The Cap and Bells.' The collation of these has added a large number of new readings and variations.

As regards Keats's letters, at least one previously unpublished will be added.

The first volume will be published on DECEMBER 1, 1900.

Masterpieces of Anthony Van Dyck

DESCRIBED, WITH HISTORICAL NOTES, AND A BIOGRAPHY OF THE ARTIST

By MAX ROOSES

THE Fifty Photogravures in this superb work are produced direct from the very finest of the Original Paintings by permission of the authorities (size of the plates, 10 × 13 inches), exhibited from August to October 1899, at Antwerp, in celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of VAN DYCK.

The pictures were collected from all parts for this Exhibition, among the contributors being Her Majesty the Queen, the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Westminster, &c. &c.

Mr. MAX ROOSES is not only an enthusiastic admirer of VAN DYCK, but also one of the most eminent connoisseurs of his work; the selection of the pictures was made by him, and he has supplied the text describing the pictures and the life and work of the master.

The text is printed in the best style on fine Dutch hand-made paper.

LORD BRASSEY.

The Illustrations will be from Photographs (where possible) from life of all the leading Statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, and officials connected with the Federal movement from its inception to the culmination, and, at the same time, the termination of its career, by the issuing of the Royal Assent to the Australian Commonwealth Enabling Bill.

The Artist of the Portraits and Drawings is Mr. Percy F. S. Spence, a native of Sydney, N.S.W., whose exhibits at the Royal Academy for the last two years have obtained favourable notice, and whose black-and-white work is well known, not only in his own country, but also here in Great Britain and America. Of his paintings, two are in the National Gallery of New South Wales; while his portrait sketch of Robert Louis Stevenson is in the possession of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, London.

The Letterpress will consist of a brief outline giving the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities who have been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, will be by Mr. G. Firth Scott, Editor of the Australian Review of Reviews and other works on Australia and Australasia.

Dutch Painters of the XIX^th Century

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES

Each volume containing upwards of 200 Illustrations in Photogravure and half-tone

Together with Six ETCHINGS by PH. ZILCKEN.

Edited by MAX ROOSES

Curator of Plantin-Moretus Museum, Antwerp.

Translated by - - - F. KNOWLES.

In each of these volumes is given some account of the Life and Work of twelve representative Dutch Painters of the nineteenth century, with Reproductions of their Pictures from Originals selected by the Artists themselves for the purpose. The aim of these books is to give specimens of the talent of Dutch Painters of the present day, for Holland has reason to be proud of the work done by her Artists during the latter half of this century. The work is edited by the well-known Art Connoisseur, Max Rooses, the Curator of the Plantin-Moretus Museum in Antwerp, and the Biographical Notices have been supplied by different writers selected for their special knowledge of the subject. In the production of the Etchings, Photogravures, and other Illustrations, the Publishers have had the assistance of the well-known Dutch Etcher, Philip Zilcken. The Edition is strictly limited for England and America.

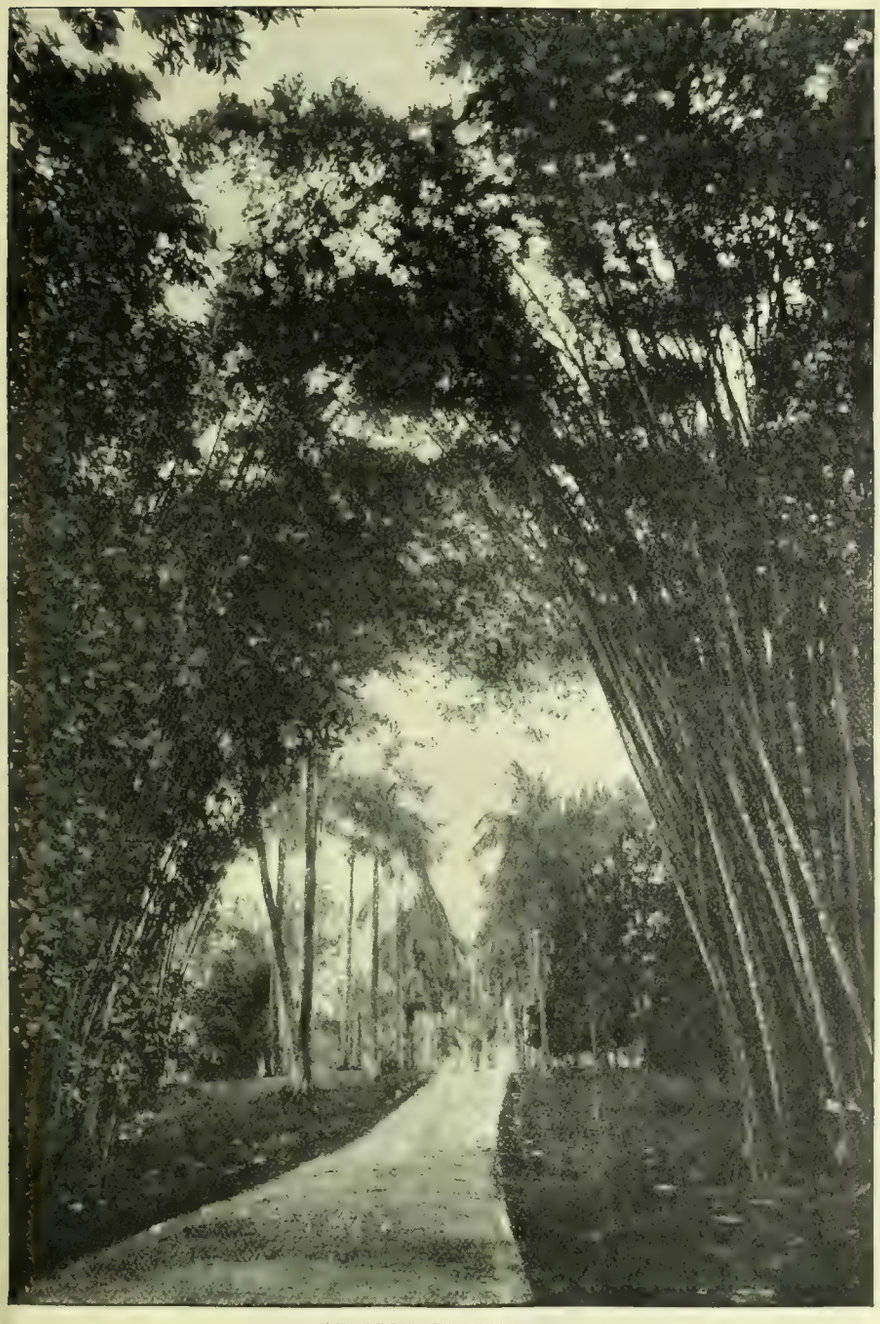
GOLDEN . . . TIPS

A DESCRIPTION OF CEYLON AND ITS GREAT TEA INDUSTRY

BY

H. W. CAVE, M.A., F.R.G.S.



AN ARCH OF BAMBOOS

THE great Tea Industry of Ceylon, although an enterprise of recent growth, has become an important item of the World's commerce. During recent years the Author has received numerous letters requesting information about Tea Planting in Ceylon.

Many correspondents were merely seeking opportunities for investment; others sought information as to the prospects which the Colony offered their sons who wished to learn Tea Planting, while nearly all wished for any information about the healthiness of the climate and life in the Tea Districts.

While describing the country and its chief industry, the Author specially dwells upon matters about which he has been repeatedly questioned.

8vo. 325 pp. 8s. 6d. net.

In the DAILY TELEGRAPH, September 8.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD writes:

'I have been [illegible], delighted, and filled with admiration and interest while perusing this week the account by Captain Joshua Slocum (published by Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.) of his voyage round the world, single-handed, on board his little boat the "Spray." Everybody who loves the ocean, or likes to hear about it; everybody who sets high value upon gallant, fearless deeds; everybody who rejoices to see the triumphs of manhood over solitude, danger, and death itself, should and must read this wonderful story of resolute adventure. I do not hesitate to call it the most extraordinary book, in its way, ever published; and the adventure itself by far the most courageous, sustained, and successful enterprise of the kind ever undertaken by mortal man.'

PALL MALL GAZETTE:

Printed on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, the Illustrations on Japanese paper, and bound in half-parchment, cloth sides, gilt top, price 6s. net. (Number limited to 250 for England and America—each copy numbered.)

N.B.—This edition is now quite out of print.

The following is a selection from Press Opinions already received.

SPECTATOR. 'We are always glad to hear from "The Amateur Angler." We remember making acquaintance with him for the first time in Dovedale, and the recollection is a very pleasant one. . . . This book is as pleasant to read as its predecessors.'

ATHENÆUM. 'Another of his pleasant and pretty volumes. . . . Marked by the same appreciation of nature and the same imperturbable good humour. . . . May he long continue to spend his holidays on the Itchen and the Ithon, and to record his adventures for the benefit of those who are less fortunate.'

COUNTY GENTLEMAN. 'Extremely bright, and told with a ring of sportsman-like enthusiasm and love of Nature's beauty which is very taking.'

FIELD. 'There is a peculiar charm about Mr. Marston's writings which it is not easy to define.'

LITERATURE. 'Adorned by many touches of humour, quiet literary grace, and keen observation.'

DAILY EXPRESS. 'There is always a warm welcome ready for anything "The Amateur Angler" may choose to publish. The world is not so full of sweet and gracious spirits like his that it can afford to miss any of his gentle musings.'

COURT CIRCULAR. 'We have nothing but praise for "The Amateur Angler's" little book.'

YORKSHIRE WEEKLY POST. 'To any overworked business man, pining for a spell of rest, and a whiff of pure country air, I heartily recommend "An Old Man's Holidays." It is better than a week at the seaside, and ever so much cheaper.'

LEEDS MERCURY. 'The charm of the book consists in a certain almost boyish vivacity, and it possesses, moreover, a delicate literary flavour.'

GLOBE. 'Invariably writes so genially, with so keen a sense both of enjoyment and of humour. . . . We hope to have more such books from "The Amateur Angler."'

DAILY MAIL. 'A very pleasant volume of reminiscences.'

SCOTSMAN. 'A pleasant and pretty little volume . . . written in the true spirit of Izaak Walton. . . . A welcome and amusing companion.'

PEOPLE. 'Altogether a charming little book.'

WEEKLY BUDGET. 'There is a refreshing breeziness about these sketches, which we have read and derived pleasure therefrom.'

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. 'The sweet breath of meadows and the murmur of rivers lend charm to all he writes.'

In this account of what may best be described as a prolonged picnic in one of the byways of the Himalayas, the author has described a journey among new and interesting surroundings, undertaken just after a fresh awakening on the part of the Indian Government to the political importance of Sikhim. But during the past year there has been a renewal of the agitation against the influence of China, which so hampers the natural trade between Hindustan and Tibet. Current events, however, and the probable parcelling out of Chinese territory, are likely to open the flood-gates of Western civilisation. But when this comes to pass, 'Lepcha Land' will be a misnomer, and another primitive, patriarchal, and peace-loving people will have died out.

The Inhabitants of the Philippines

ANITOS OF NORTHERN TRIBES

By FREDERIC H. SAWYER

Memb. Inst. C.E.; Memb. Inst. N.A.

THIS book is the outcome of a long residence in the Islands by an English Engineer in touch with every class of the community.

It describes the scenery and vegetation of the Archipelago and the principal geographical features.

It sketches the organisation of the Spanish Government, and gives the Author's personal recollections of six Governors-General.

It reviews the history of the Religious Orders, especially of the Austin Friars, formerly established in England and Scotland.

The formation of secret anti-clerical societies is described, also the causes and course of the Tagal revolt of 1896–7 and its sanguinary suppression.

Four chapters describe the Resources of the Philippines.

The chapter on the Prospects of the Islands is written in an optimistic vein.

Two chapters are devoted to Social Life in Manila and to Sport.

The noble efforts of the Catholic missionaries are eulogised in no stinted terms, their remarkable success is acknowledged, and the relapse into barbarism caused by their withdrawal is lamented.

Altogether the book appeals to many sorts of men. The lover of nature, the geographer, the historian, the statesman, the investor, the explorer, the merchant, the prospector, the planter, the sportsman, and the missionary will all find something of value to them; most of them something they did not know before, expressed in terse and vigorous English by an Author writing from personal knowledge.

The Remarkable History

OF THE

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY

Including that of the French Traders of North-Western Canada, and of the North West, X Y, and Astor Fur Companies

By GEORGE BRYCE, M.A., LL.D.

Professor in Manitoba College, Winnipeg.

Dr. Bryce has had special opportunities for becoming acquainted with the history, position, and inner life of the Hudson's Bay Company. He has lived for nearly thirty years in Winnipeg, for the whole of that time in sight of Fort Garry, the fur-traders' capital, or what remains of it; he has visited many of the H. B. Company's posts from Fort William to Victoria, in the Lake Superior and Lake of the Woods region, in Manitoba, Assiniboia, Alberta, and British Columbia.

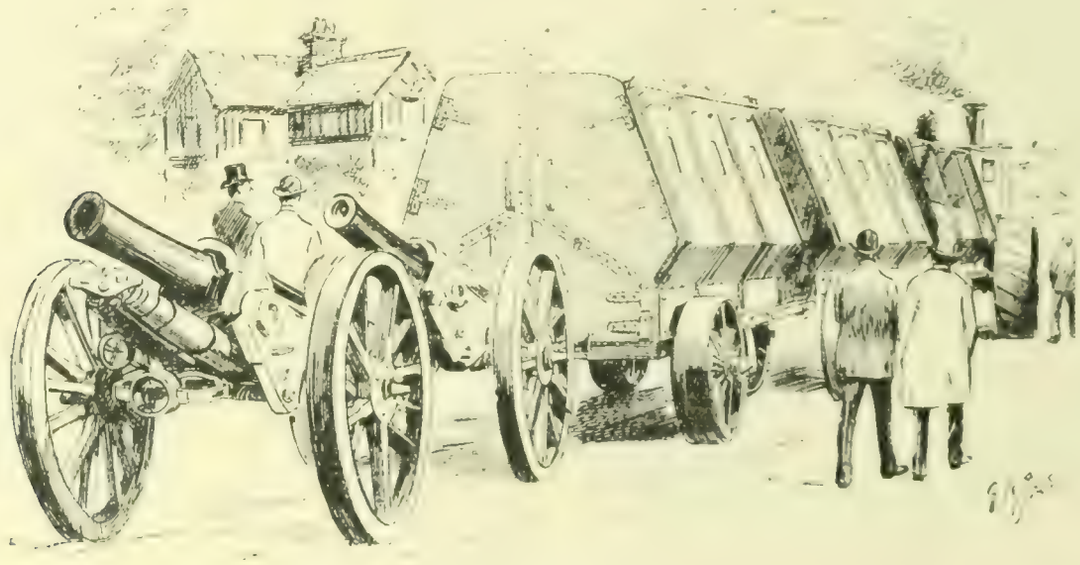
Mechanical Traction in War

FOR ROAD TRANSPORT

With Notes on Automobiles generally, by Lieut.-Col. OTFRIED LAYRIZ, of the German Army.

Translated by R. B. MARSTON

PREFACE. The transport of food and war material from the terminus of the railway to the camp is of the utmost importance to the army, and calls for the employment of all available means. Road transport by means of mechanical traction is now so developed as to be worthy of serious consideration in conjunction with horse traction for war purposes, and for this reason an attempt to set out the possibilities offered by various methods of mechanical traction may be justified.



Armoured Road Train, as ordered by Lord Roberts for the South African Campaign

'The value of steam traction as an efficient supplement to animal transport, especially in carrying supplies in rear of an army, was clearly proved.'—Report on the Salisbury Manœuvres, 1898, from Field-Marshal Right Hon. LORD WOLSELEY, K.P., &c., Commander-in-Chief, to the Secretary of State for War.

FULLY ILLUSTRATED

'There can be little doubt that mechanical traction will in future form an important feature in military operations, and many readers connected with the Army will thank Mr. Marston for the translation of this useful work, to which he has added so much valuable material.'—ENGLISH MECHANIC.

'Extremely interesting and valuable, and has been well translated and supplied with many excellent and instructive illustrations.'—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

'No book could have been more opportune. We hope it will be read by every officer, and its lessons recognised by every civilian.'—MOTOR CAR JOURNAL.

'An excellent English version of an admirable German work. . . . The work cannot but profit military readers.'—SCOTSMAN.

'An interesting and comprehensive account of the development of mechanical means of military transport.'—ATHENÆUM.

SEVEN MAIDS.

By L. T. Meade.

With Ten Illustrations by Percy Tarrant.

The Seven Maids, their doings and misdoings, forms a bright and lively narrative, which girls of every degree will be sure to like. The story begins when four girl boarders are introduced to Hazelhurst Rectory, and Marjorie, the daughter of the house, who does not approve of their coming, develops symptoms of jealousy, envy, and selfishness. She suffers herself, and drags many of her companions into the net, but the story closes showing a nature purified by suffering. The Seven Maids are each distinct types of girl character, two American girls being especially fresh and piquant.

CHARGE! OR BRITON AND BOER.

By Geo. Manville Fenn.

With Eight Illustrations by W. H. C. Groome.

A patriotic story of Boer and Briton, which recalls in many of its adventurous episodes the recent struggle in South Africa. The homestead of John Moray, an English settler, at Cameldorn, is visited by a Boer commando headed by an Irish renegade, who carries off Val Moray, a hot-blooded, independent lad of eighteen, to serve ostensibly in the protection of the Boer State. Val makes an unavailing resistance, then watches his chance for a dash for liberty on his horse Sandho, is joined by a friendly Kaffir, and escapes to Echo Nek. Meanwhile, as the Boers have defied the British Government, war breaks out; Val runs the gauntlet in most exciting fashion, and joins a troop of Light Horse, where he soon becomes a general favourite. He sees many of the grim realities of war, and performs prodigies of valour.

MISS NONENTITY.

By L. T. Meade.

With Eight Illustrations by W. Rainey.

Girls of all ages will be interested in reading how Clarissa Rodney, daughter of Professor Rodney, on gaining the Randall Scholarship, determines to use the money this brings in paying for the eminent specialist Sir John Carbery, who saves her father's life during a serious illness. She engages the doctor unknown to her own family, but gets into great trouble on discovering that the scholarship is not to be paid in cash. She is saved by an ingenious method of her own, and partly by means of her sister Janet, "Miss Nonentity," and her uncle, Thomas Jenkins, a wealthy and good-hearted man. Clarissa suffers in the method she adopts to pay the doctor, but in the end her character is cleared, and her bravery and devotion are duly acknowledged.

THE STORY OF A SCHOOL CONSPIRACY.

By Andrew Home.

With Twelve Illustrations by A. Monro.

Andrew Home is a great favourite with the average school-boy because of his success in delineating boy nature in the school-room and playground. How a French boy kept a whole school in hot water and got many of the scholars into great trouble, at Westbury College, is here related with vivacity and unflagging interest. There is a moral about true and false friendship which he who runs may read.

THE THREE WITCHES.

By Mrs Molesworth.

Charmingly Illustrated by Lewis Baumer.

MRS MOLESWORTH is here quite at home in delineating how certain young people, who "like strange and mysterified things better than anything else in the world," have their wishes gratified during a visit to Oldenwells, where they gradually weave around three persons the glamour of romance, and afterwards find it quite as interesting and fascinating when they have the mystery and romance unravelled towards the end in quite a natural way.

Price 2s. 6d.

CELIA'S CONQUEST.

By L. E. Tiddeman.

Author of "A Humble Heroine," and "A Fairy Grandmother."

Celia Drew, a quick, bright, impulsive, and warm-hearted girl, and Florizel her brother, are the motherless children of an English artist, who, when the story opens, has placed them in a home at St Etienne, to which they become greatly attached. When called on to settle with Miss Helsham at Brixton, London, Celia is inclined to rebel at first, and sister and brother wish they were back in France. How Celia was conquered by love and discipline, and how they settle with their father again at beloved St Etienne, is depicted here; and Celia is left in the "hey-day of youth, her heart full of joy and love, a blossom among blossoms."

New Editions. Price 2s. each.

THISTLE AND ROSE. By AMY WALTON. Illustrated by R. Barnes.

"Is as desirable a present to make to a girl as any one could wish."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

THROUGH THICK AND THIN: The Story of a School Campaign. By ANDREW HOME. Illustrated by W. Rainey.

"This is just the kind of book for boys to rave over; it does not cram moral axioms down their throats, the characters [illegible] them instead."—Morning Post.

OUTSKERRY: The Story of an Island. By HELEN WATERS. Illustrated by R. Burns.

"The diversion provided is varied beyond expectation (and indeed belief). We read of an 'Arabian Night's Entertainment,' but here is enough for an Arctic night."—The Times.

HUGH MELVILLE'S QUEST: A Boy's Adventures in the Days of the Armada. By E. M. HOLMES. Illustrated by W. Boucher.

"A refreshing, stirring story . . . and one sure to delight young boys and young girls too."—Spectator.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, Ltd., London and Edinburgh.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPAEDIA.

Ten Volumes, cloth, £5; half calf or half morocco, £7. 10s.; half morocco extra, £8. 10s.

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE ENCYCLOPÆDIA IN THE MARKET.

For confirmation of this statement consult such articles as SOUDAN, ACETYLENE, ARGON, BISMARCK, GLADSTONE, JAMESON, KITCHENER, &c., &c.

Pall Mall Gazette, March 8, 1898, says: 'In many ways the "Britannica" is a work rather for the specialist than the ordinary man, whose wants are far better supplied by the brief but far more comprehensive notes of "Chambers's." Indeed, in the present form, "Chambers's" is almost an ideal work of reference.'

Chambers's English Dictionary.

In One Volume, Imp. 8vo. 1264 pages. Cloth, 12s. 6d.; half morocco, 18s. Edited by THOMAS DAVIDSON.

This New Library Dictionary of the English Language gives the Explanation, Pronunciation, and Etymology of Words, together with compound Phrases, Technical Terms in use in the Arts and Sciences, Colloquial and Slang Words, being in fact a Treasury of English from the XVIth to the XXth Century.

Chambers's Biographical Dictionary.

Cloth, 10s. 6d.; half morocco, 15s.

Mr. CLEMENT K. SHORTER, writing in the Illustrated London News, says: 'That truly fascinating compilation, Chambers's Biographical Dictionary, is a book that I use regularly and in which I find something of the individuality of Dr. Patrick and Mr. Francis Hinds Groome at every turn.'

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Cloth, 6s.; or with 32 Maps, 8s.; or half morocco, 12s.

'A very useful volume, which contains a really prodigious amount of information about many thousands of places.'—Times.

FROM THE CAPE TO CAIRO

The First Traverse of Africa from South to North

By EWART S. GROGAN and ARTHUR H. SHARP

With Introductory Letter from the Right Hon. Cecil Rhodes

'This is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable books of African travel and exploration which has appeared for many years. It bears on every page the imprint of an individuality of no ordinary type, the narrative rivets attention from first to last.'—DAILY CHRONICLE.

'A notable and attractive addition to the great library of Africa travel.'—MORNING POST.

'Mr. Grogan captivates his readers from the very beginning of his story. The volume abounds in good practical sense and shrewd observation. Its illustrations, of which there are about a hundred and twenty, are admirable.'—DAILY NEWS.

'A book that deserves the heartiest reception from all who like bright and vivaciously written and magnificently illustrated accounts of travel and adventure. The authors have seen much that is new and strange in these little known regions of Central Africa, and they record it with admirable judgment and effect.'—DAILY EXPRESS.

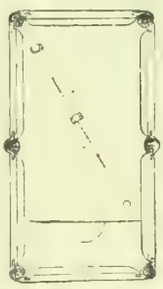
Fun on the Billiard Table

A Collection of 75 Amusing Tricks and Games, with Photographs and Diagrams

By 'STANCLIFFE.'

Crown 8vo. cloth. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*



EXPLANATION OF TRICK AND DIAGRAM.

Get two outside covers of any sort of the ordinary match boxes, large size. Place them on the billiard table with a ball on each. Put a third ball in a line with a pocket and the two other balls as in photo.

Play a hard shot with the ball on the table into the pocket through the match boxes, which should fly off the table, and the two balls will occupy the places where the match boxes stood.

'To say that no billiard room should be without this joyous and ingenious little volume is nothing; there is no player, amateur or professional, who would not get his moneysworth out of it.'—SPORTSMAN.

VETERINARY MANUAL FOR HORSE-OWNERS. By FRANK TOWNEND BARTON, M.R.C.V.S., Author of 'Our Friend the Horse,' 'Unsound Horses,' &c.

This work has been expressly written for the purpose of supplying the intelligent Horse-Owner with a thoroughly reliable and up-to-date Manual on the general management of the horse in health, and its treatment in accident and disease. It is in no way intended to supplant the services of professional assistance, but those who are not within reach of such will find reference to its pages of the most signal service. For the purpose of ready reference, the multifarious diseases, &c., have been arranged in alphabetical order.

HARRISON & SONS' PUBLICATIONS

A Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the

PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE

TOGETHER WITH MEMOIRS OF THE PRIVY COUNCILLORS AND KNIGHTS.

By Sir BERNARD BURKE, C.B., LL.D., Ulster King of Arms.

Edited by ASHWORTH P. BURKE.

SIXTY THIRD EDITION, 1901. More than 2,000 pages, super royal 8vo. cloth gilt, price £2. 2s

This PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE is the only volume published annually, which gives a genealogical account of the families of the Peers and Baronets of the realm, with their collateral branches. Its plan is therefore not merely confined to lists of the surviving relations of Peers and Baronets, but contains an account of every member of their families, living and dead, to each of whom a separate paragraph is devoted. In the Key will be found the name of everyone entitled to precedence, with a number prefixed to each, showing at a glance their exact relative precedence. The rules of PRECEDENCE are set forth in ample detail. To the Peerage and Baronetage proper is added the KNIGHTAGE, which gives in alphabetical order an account of every Knight, Commander, Companion and Member of the various orders of Knighthood, and of their Widows. Complete lists of these ORDERS are also given with their members in order of precedence. An account of FOREIGN TITLES used by British Subjects will be found at the end of the work. The ILLUSTRATIONS with BLAZONS of the Arms are a special feature of this work.

PRESS NOTICES.

'While most other publications of the kind form most useful indexes to the living members of the Aristocracy, Sir Bernard Burke's handsome volume is perhaps the most useful and valuable companion to the student of English History.'—TIMES.

'The foremost place among works of reference is claimed, almost by traditional right, by Sir Bernard Burke's "Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage," which still remains the Standard Authority as to Aristocratic Lineage.'—WHITEHALL REVIEW.

'Constant reference to the pages of "Burke" enables us to testify to its invariable accuracy. . . . For completeness and comprehensiveness on all matters connected with Titles of honour it is unsurpassed.'—COURT JOURNAL.

'An indispensable companion to all classes.'—ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

A GENEALOGICAL AND HERALDIC HISTORY OF THE LANDED GENTRY OF GREAT BRITAIN. By Sir BERNARD BURKE, C.B., LL.D., Ulster King of Arms. Edited by ASHWORTH P. BURKE. Tenth Edition, 1900, thoroughly revised. Super royal 8vo. one volume, cloth gilt, uniform with the 'Peerage,' price 42*s*.

The Editor has been enabled, in diligent collaboration with the families themselves, to make this edition especially complete, accurate and interesting, not only to the landed classes, but to all lovers of family history. All the well-known features of the work have been retained, and much additional information is given which will, it is hoped, enhance the value of the book from every point of view. To illustrate the thousands of articles, a very large number of representations in facsimile of the ARMORIAL BOOK PLATES in use by the heads of families are given. Their artistic merit and heraldic interest must, it is felt, extend the wide popularity of this standard work. The LANDED GENTRY is a vast compendium of genealogical knowledge, for it contains the records of nearly four thousand families in England and Scotland, with all their branches, and accurate descriptions of their heraldic insignia.

THE NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF THE

HYMNAL COMPANION

To the Book of Common Prayer

EDITED BY

LORD BISHOP OF EXETER.

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition, which contained 550, having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The New Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book, and cannot be used with it.

The Home and School Hymnal

THE MUSIC REVISED BY THE LATE

SIR JOSEPH BARNBY

THIS new Hymnal, which has been several years in preparation, is now ready. It is believed that it is the most representative Hymn Book that has yet been produced; for not only does it include most of the old Hymns that have become indispensable to any popular collection, but it contains a large number of Hymns that have not previously appeared in other Hymnals. In addition to many others, the Committee of Preparation have been privileged to include Hymns by Lord Tennyson, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Mrs. Browning, Professor F. T. Palgrave, W. Cullen Bryant, Walter C. Smith, &c.

The Hymnal is carefully arranged in sections, and will be found not only eminently suitable for Sunday Schools and Bible Classes, but well adapted for use in the Home Circle, in Guilds, in Temperance Meetings, and for Flower and Hospital Services.

The greatest pains have been taken to adapt tunes to the words, and the Committee have had the singular advantage of the services of Sir JOSEPH BARNBY, late Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, as Musical Editor. No expense has been spared to procure the best and most suitable Music, and the book contains a large number of tunes written expressly for the Committee by Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and Professor Villiers Stanford.

Many copyright compositions are inserted in the work by arrangement with their composers or proprietors. These include tunes by Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir John Stainer, Sir John Goss, Sir Robert Stewart, Sir W. G. Cusins, Dr. Harford Lloyd, the Right Hon. and Most Rev. the Archbishop of York, Dr. W. H. Monk, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. J. B. Dykes, Dr. Edward Bunnett, Dr. J. F. Bridge, Mr. Henry Smart, and others.

Among the Copyright Hymns which the Committee have been privileged to include is

LORD TENNYSON'S 'CROSSING THE BAR'

WITH SPECIAL SETTING OF MUSIC BY SIR JOSEPH BARNBY.

THE VARIOUS EDITIONS OF THE HYMNAL WILL BE SOLD NET TO THE PUBLIC

WITH MUSIC.

GOBBO-BOBO, the Two-Eyed Griffin: a Fairy Story. By H. E. INMAN. With numerous Original Illustrations and 8 full-page Plates by E. A. MASON. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt edges, 6s.

Mr. Inman introduces his readers to 'Gobbo-Bobo,' otherwise 'The Temple Bar Griffin,' who keeps guard over London opposite the Law Courts. Wonderful adventures follow, and we come across notabilities of the town, real and mystical personages of old time and to-day being jumbled up in the most delightful manner; such as the 'Aldermanic Turtle,' who refuses to be made into soup, the 'Dandy Lion,' the 'Welsh Rabbit,' Gog and Magog, &c. Mr. Mason's illustrations are very happy in expressing the author's queer fancies and help to complete a charming children's volume.

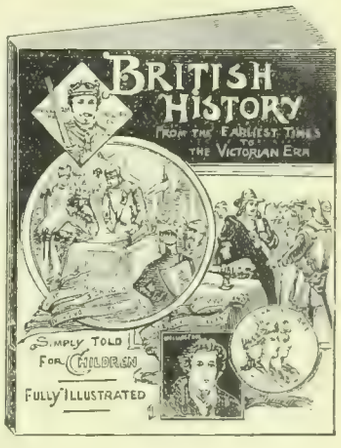
The aim of this volume, which is copiously illustrated, has been to tell the story of our country's glorious record from Alfred the Great to Victoria, 1900, in simple yet interesting language, well within the understanding of the little ones, and in such a manner as to form a stepping stone to a future love of history.

BRITISH HISTORY:

From the Earliest Times to the Victorian Era. Simply Told for Children. With numerous full-page and other Illustrations of important events. Large 4to. enamelled picture boards cut flush, 1*s.*; or, ditto, ditto, cloth gilt, 2*s.*



The most important events in each reign are here recorded in an interesting manner so as to hold the attention of little folk and form the groundwork of an interest in their country's history which will later on lead them to love its study.

Frederick Warne & Co.'s Publications

The Dogs of War: a Romance of the Civil War. By EDGAR PICKERING. With Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 6*s*.

'The author deals with the stirring incidents of the Cromwellian period, and having a thorough grasp of his subject has produced a capital story, dramatically told.' PEOPLE

The Mystery of Ladyplace. By CHRISTIAN LYS. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 6*s*.

'Readers of "The Fortress of Yadasara" will not be disappointed with Mr. Lys's new volume. The mystery is one that would baffle Sherlock Holmes himself. The characters are all lifelike and interesting that of the stout German Doctor being particularly clever.'

The Fortress of Yadasara. By CHRISTIAN LYS. With 8 Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 6*s*.

'The tale is told with spirit and art, so that throughout we feel the shadow of the fortress over us.' ATHENÆUM.

In Connection with the De Willoughby Claim. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 6*s*.

'Mrs. Burnett has never written better than in this story. She has never delineated character more delicately, more sympathetically, her pathos has never been truer, her humour more engaging.' DAILY CHRONICLE.

Vroni: the Weaver's Heart's Dearest. By BLANCHE WILLIS HOWARD. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 6*s*.

'"Vroni" is one of those pathetic and charming stories which the reader does not readily forget. "Guenn" we had learnt to regard as Miss Howard's masterpiece, but in point of artistic finish, and perhaps in power, "Vroni" takes a higher position. . . . . One word best expresses our feelings regarding the story, it is delightful.'—BIRMINGHAM POST.

'THE DOGS OF WAR'

Woman and Artist. By MAX O'RELL, Author of 'John Bull & Co.' &c., &c. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, flat back, 3*s*. 6*d*.

'Good things are rife in this delightful book, which ought to win a shining success.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

To Pay the Price. By SILAS K. HOCKING. With Original Illustrations by ARTHUR A. DIXON. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 3*s*. 6*d*.

'MY FRIEND ANNE'

When Life is Young. By SILAS K. HOCKING. With Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt edges. 2*s*. 6*d*.

My Friend Anne: a Story of the Sixteenth Century. By JESSIE ARMSTRONG. With Illustrations by G. D. HAMMOND, R.I. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3*s*. 6*d*.

The scene of the story is for the most part laid amongst the Maids of Honour of Katherine of Aragon and the Court of Henry VIII. The life of the period is depicted with accuracy, and yet at the same time with an interest which cannot fail to please.

A Chase round the World. By ROBERT OVERTON. With numerous Illustrations. Large crown 8vo. [illegible]

'Mr. Overton has written a thoroughly entertaining story, worthy of his best efforts, and his exciting narrative has been capitally illustrated by A. Monro.'—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

The Fortunes of Claude. By EDGAR PICKERING. With 6 Full-page Plates and Initial Letters specially designed by LANCELOT SPEED. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt. 3*s*. 6*d*.

'The Fortunes of Claude' are largely connected with those of Prince Charles Edward, under whose banner he enrolled himself. There is plenty of fighting, highwaymen, and adventures of all kinds, such as please boys to read about.

Hunting for Gold: Adventures in the Klondyke. By HUME NISBET. With Original Illustrations by HAL HURST. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 3*s*. 6*d*.

Heroes of the United Service. Romance of Naval Deeds. Tales of the British Army and Navy. By L. VALENTINE. Containing upwards of 150 Illustrations in the Text, and 32 Full-page Plates. Large crown 4to. cloth gilt, and gilt edges. 7*s*. 6*d*.

'"Unselfish and heroic acts have made our Empire the greatest in the world." So said Lord Salisbury on one occasion, and how very true his words are will at once be seen by those who take up this really fine volume. It is the final work of its author, Mrs. Valentine, than whom none have known better how to deal with such subjects. . . The most striking point in the general life-history is set out crisply and concisely. War maps, plans, and illustrations go to make up a most entertaining and handsome volume.' [illegible]

Travels by the Fireside: a Book for Winter Evenings. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., C.M. With Original Illustrations by CHARLES HARRISON. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Mr. Gordon Stables leads the Alaskan's Captive [illegible] a long and absorbingly interesting journey, almost without our being aware of it. By the cosy fireside we can sit while Mr. Stables arrays before us his lifelike pictures of distant lands.

Kings of the Sea: a Story of the Spanish Main. By HUME NISBET. With Illustrations by J. B. GREENE. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt. 3*s*. 6*d*.

A capital story of adventure on the Spanish Main.

CAPT. J. CREAGH.

SPARKS FROM CAMP FIRES: an Autobiography. By Capt. J. CREAGH, Author of 'A Scamper to Sebastopol and Jerusalem,' 'Armenians, Koords, and Turks,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6s. [Ready.

Capt. Creagh's recollections are likely to prove of great interest at the present moment. His childhood was passed in Ireland, and he has much that is authentic to tell of the society portrayed in Lever's novels. Thence he went to school in England, and passed in due course into Sandhurst. His account of the conditions of life there, and of the state of the army in the years preceding the Crimean War, is both detailed and graphic. He gives a vivid picture of the mismanagement before Sebastopol, of which he was himself an eye-witness, and the later chapters of his book deal with service in India in the years immediately following the Mutiny.

THEODOR VON SOSNOSKY.

ENGLAND'S DANGER: the Future of British Army Reform. By THEODOR VON SOSNOSKY. Crown 8vo.

Written from the point of view of a foreigner who is thoroughly conversant with the workings and strength of all European armies, this book sets out to show by comparison and deduction the weak organisation of the British army, taking into consideration the vast extent of our Empire. After rapidly viewing the successes and failures of our army for some years past, the author enters into details concerning its faulty and mistaken system, and shows how it needs entire transformation in view of modern requirements, and indicates how these necessary reforms can be brought about. His conclusions bend in the direction of conscription as the best solution of existing difficulties.

GENERAL GORDON.

GORDON'S CAMPAIGN IN CHINA. By Himself. With an Introduction and Short Account of the Tai-ping Rebellion by Col. R. H. VETCH, C.B. Crown 8vo. 1s. [Ready.

Just now, when the eyes of the whole civilised world are fixed with the deepest interest upon the tragical drama playing in China, this little book, giving for the first time General Gordon's own account of the suppression of the Tai-ping Rebellion (1863-4), will be found of great public interest, not only because it was written by Gordon himself, but because it is also clear, concise, and necessarily an authentic narrative of the events in which he took a prominent part.

FREDERICK HOVENDEN.

WHAT IS HEAT? A Peep into Nature's most Hidden Secrets. By FREDERICK HOVENDEN, F.L.S., F.R.S., F.R.M.S., Author of 'What is Life?' A New and Revised Edition, with 107 Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 6s. [This day.

A book of absorbing interest. . . . . The volume is further enhanced in value by the several illustrations which are afforded, and which must of necessity commend themselves to the thoughtful consideration of engineers and general readers alike . . . . The plainest possible language has been employed, so that the layman may be fully able to grasp the issues.

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL beg to announce the publication of

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION OF

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS

TO BE KNOWN AS

The Authentic Edition

It will be completed in 21 vols. square crown 8vo. 5s. per vol.

TYPE.—The setting is in Long Primer, a thin open-faced type, and specially cast for this edition, leaded out as much as is consistent with the quantity of matter that has to be dealt with in many of the works, so as to form volumes proportionate in form and comfortable to handle.

THE PAPER employed is of the same character throughout the Set, and is of the make known as antique wove, bright in colour, and as light handling, yet as opaque as it is possible to make it, having regard to the number of pages contained in most of the volumes. In the case of the thinner volumes, in order to preserve uniformity in thickness, the Publishers have been compelled to use a somewhat thicker, yet similar, make of paper, thus accounting for the apparent difference in the appearance of the printing.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS include all the originals by Hablot K. Browne, Cruikshank, Seymour, Walker, Landseer, Maclise, Leech, Marcus Stone, Cattermole, Luke Fildes, and the more recent ones by Charles Green, Maurice Greiffenhagen, Harry Furniss, F. H. Townsend, A. Jules Goodman, &c., as used for the first time in the well-known Gadshill Edition.

EACH VOLUME CONTAINS

one of the most popular subjects having been chosen. The rest of the illustrations are reproduced by a new process. They will not be lettered in the usual way, but a tissue will be introduced in front of each plate with the title printed in red ink.

The Harvest of a Quiet Eye

By [illegible] J. R. VERNON, [illegible] 'Rambles in Common Things,' 'The Last Load Home,' &c., with an etched Frontispiece and Title Page by FRANCIS WALKER. Crown 8vo. cloth [illegible]

Mr. Ruskin wrote of the first edition of 'The Harvest of a Quiet Eye,' that 'he had never seen anything more gracefully or rightly done.'

'We are glad to find that a new edition is about to make this volume known to a second generation of readers. The lover of nature will still find few books like it. The author is a poet, though he always writes in prose. He has the poet's eye, and the poet's imagination, as well as the poet's power of melodious utterance. He takes his readers into the country at every season of the year, points out some of its many beauties, and tells us something of the deep lessons they have to teach.'—LIVERPOOL COURIER.

Pioneering on the Congo

By the Rev. W. HOLMAN BENTLEY, Chevalier de l'Ordre Royal du Lion; Author of 'The Dictionary and Grammar of the Kongo Language,' 'Life on the Congo'; Translator of the New Testament into Kongo, &c.

'Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Holman Bentley's new book on the Congo. I have only had time so far to dip here and there into its pages, but what little I have read impresses me very much with the sturdy honesty of the writer. It is a great pleasure to me to know that he has survived so many years' life in that tropical region, and I trust that he may live many years yet as a shining example of longevity, good sense, and zeal. Through this book I have renewed my acquaintance with many persons whom I once knew familiarly, and I owe Mr. Bentley many thanks for his very full accounts of them, though I am sorry to say that many others in whom I took great interest have fallen victims to the climate.—Yours faithfully, HENRY M. STANLEY.'

'Mr. Bentley's book is so brightly written, and is so crammed with interesting information, that, apart altogether from the missionary element, it should be one of the most popular books of the season. To those, however, who follow the progress of missions with sympathy, 'Pioneering on the Congo' will be simply fascinating. It is one of the best illustrated missionary books we have seen.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Tom Wallis: A Tale of the South Seas.

By LOUIS BECKE, Author of 'Wild Life in Southern Seas,' 'By Reef and Palm,' 'Admiral Philip,' &c. With 11 Illustrations by LANCELOT SPEED. Large crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 5*s*.

'This is a sea-story, but of a kind that a landsman may follow from end to end. Mr. Becke is, as our readers probably know, entirely at home in the regions of the Pacific. Altogether this is about as spirited and well constructed a tale of adventure as we have seen for some time.'—SPECTATOR.

'It will be read with delight by boys old and young.'—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

'A rattling tale of adventure.'—BRITISH AUSTRALIAN. 'An enthralling, healthy, breezy story of the sea.'—IRISH TIMES.

'The adventures of Tom Wallis will please readers of any age, though the illustrations are of a nature best calculated to gratify the longings of school-boys and school-girls. The book is excellent literature of its kind.'—ATHENÆUM. 'A vivid and clever sea-story, told by a master pen.'—RECORD.

New Story by the Author of 'THE INCORRIGIBLE GIRL.'

GOLD IN THE FURNACE.

By M. H. CORNWALL LEGH, Author of 'An Incorrigible Girl' &c. With Illustrations. Large crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s* 6*d*.

'One is reminded of Charles Reade's "Never Too Late to Mend." The story is wholly different. Miss Cornwall Legh has no special purpose, except to show the working of real Christian principle. But in power her work is quite fit to be ranked with that of the great novelist. We have seldom seen anything so good.'—SPECTATOR.

'Full of interest.'—GENTLEWOMAN.

'A good tale beautifully told.'—METHODIST RECORDER.

'An attractive gift-book.'—SCOTSMAN.

By JESSIE MANSERGH.

ABOUT PEGGY SAVILLE.

By JESSIE MANSERGH, Author of 'Sisters Three,' 'A Rose-coloured Thread,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 2*s*. 6*d*.

'Somewhat in the vein of Miss Charlotte Yonge is "Peggy Saville." A brightly told and sensible story concerning a group of youths and maidens who dwelt in a country vicarage and filled their home with glee, tempered by the anxiety of their elders.'

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

By RUTH LAMB.

A WILFUL WARD.

By RUTH LAMB, Author of 'Only a Girl-Wife,' 'Her Own Choice,' 'In the Twilight Side by Side.' Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2*s*. 6*d*.

In this case the title carries its own moral. The troubles into which the heroine falls, by yielding to a very common temptation, are well depicted.

By H. E. COLVILE.

LIFE'S ANCHOR:

a Story of the Days of Dr. Johnson and Hannah More. By HARRIET E. COLVILE, Author of 'Clipped Wings,' 'For Cloudy Days,' &c. Illustrated by J. S. LUCAS. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 2*s*. 6*d*.

'No tales will be more missed this year than the late Mrs. Marshall's. The nearest approach to her interesting historical romances is "Life's Anchor."'—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

By M. E. PALGRAVE.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

By MARY F. PALGRAVE, Author of 'Driftwood,' 'How Dick Found his Sea Legs,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2*s*.

A well-told story for girls, showing the need for quick decision in breaking off an unequal yoking with unbelievers.

Dr. GORDON STABLES' New Story for Boys.

ALLAN ADAIR;

or, Here and There in Many Lands. By Dr. GORDON STABLES, R.N., Author of 'In the Land of the Lion and the Ostrich,' 'Our Home in the Silver West,' &c. With Illustrations by ALFRED PEARSE. Large crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s*. 6*d*.

'Cannibalism and nuggets of gold, storm and shipwreck, startling encounters, and wonderful rescues, these only indicate some of the elements which the practised story-teller has introduced into his narrative, and they have helped to make it one of the most vigorous and telling he has ever given to his boy friends.'—GLASGOW HERALD.

By HESBA STRETTON (New Editions).

THROUGH A NEEDLE'S EYE.

By HESBA STRETTON, Author of 'Jessica's First Prayer,' 'Cobwebs and Cables,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 3*s*. 6*d*.

A new edition of a powerful story by a well-known authoress.

THE LORD'S PURSE-BEARERS.

By HESBA STRETTON, Author of 'Jessica's First Prayer,' 'Cobwebs and Cables.' Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 1*s*. 6*d*.

This story has been out of print for some time. It is now re-issued because the folly at which it aims—namely, the giving of alms without taking the trouble of investigating the merits of those who beg—is as rife as ever. It is written with all this accomplished writer's well-known style and power.

By the Rev. S. PUGH.

GEOFF BLAKE,

his Chums and his Foes: a Story of Schoolboy Life. By the late Rev. S. S. PUGH, Author of 'My Schoolfellow, Val Bowner,' 'Rights and Wrongs,' &c. Illustrated by LANCELOT SPEED. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2*s*. 6*d*.

It will be found to contain all the quiet power of Mr. Pugh's previous stories, and to convey, in a natural and easy way, some much-needed and most important lessons.

A NEW BOOK FOR BOYS.

ADVENTURES in the SOUTH PACIFIC.

By 'ONE WHO WAS BORN THERE. With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2*s*. 6*d*.

This book contains some very vivid pictures of life in the South Pacific Islands seventy years ago. We follow the hero through hurricanes and famines, and trips from one group of islands to another, and perilous risks from man-eaters, sharks, and other foes of the human race. It should find special favour among boy-readers.

MONOGRAPH OF THE HIRUNDINIDÆ, or Family of Swallows. By Dr. BOWDLER SHARPE and the late CLAUDE W. WYATT, Member of the British Ornithologists' Union. With 103 beautiful Hand-coloured Plates of the Species, and 26 Coloured Maps showing Distribution. Prices in parts, £10. 10s. net; bound in 2 Vols. 4to. calf gilt, £12. 12s. net; or strong half-morocco, uncut, top edges gilt, £12. 12s. net.

MACDONALD (Capt. R. J., R.A.) HISTORY OF THE DRESS OF THE ROYAL REGIMENT OF ARTILLERY, 1625–1897, with 25 Coloured Plates and 91 Vignettes, large 4to. handsomely bound in cloth of the Regimental Colours, £1 5s. net.

This History of the Dress of the Royal Artillery is one of the most artistic books ever produced on British Military Dress, and one of the most extended in period. The coloured plates have been drawn with a vigour and artistic feeling too rare in most works on the subject, while their accuracy is beyond question, and their reproduction in colour is worthy of their artistic merit. Less than 200 copies remain for sale, and as, besides its historical interest, it is an unusually varied storehouse of picturesque military costumes, it must soon go out of print.

DR. COPINGER'S WORKS.

Approved School Books by Dr. Cornwell, F.R.G.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 88th Edition, 3*s.* 6*d.* : or with Thirty Maps, 5*s.* 6*d.*

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system. ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2*s.* 6*d.*, or 4*s.* coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1*s.*; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1*s.* 4*d.* Questions, 6*d.*

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1*s.*

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL Grammar. 65th Edition, 2*s.* red leather; or 1*s.* 9*d.* cloth.

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 88th Edition, 1*s.* cloth; 9*d.* sewed.

'This simple Introduction is as good a book as can be used.'—SPECTATOR.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1*s.* 6*d.* KEY, 3*s.*

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found invaluable to the intelligent instructor.'
WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the Same Time. 4th Edition, 1*s.*

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: a Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4*s.* 6*d.*

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.'—LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY TO SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4*s.* 6*d.*

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1*s.* 6*d.* KEY, 4*s.* 6*d.*

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and, its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.'—ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

ARITHMETIC FOR BEGINNERS. Combines simplicity and fulness in teaching the First Four Rules and Elementary Fractions. 9th Edition. 1*s.*

THE IVORY BRIDE. By THOMAS PINKERTON, Author of 'Dead Oppressors' &c. [Just out.

THE STRENGTH OF STRAW. By ESMÈ STUART, Author 'Sent to Coventry,' 'In the Dark,' &c. [Just out.

JEAN KEIR OF CRAIGNEIL. By SARAH TYTLER, Author of 'Miss Nanse,' 'Logan's Loyalty,' &c. [Just out.

FRIENDSHIP AND FOLLY. By MARIA LOUISE POOL, the well-known American Writer, Author of 'In a Dike Shanty,' 'Boss,' 'Dally,' &c. [Just out.

THE REALIZATION OF JUSTUS MORAN. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of 'The Adventures of John Johns,' 'The Progress of Pauline Kessler,' &c. [Third Edition.

WORLD.—'A remarkable novel. There is vital interest in the author's delineation of Justus Moran.'

MEN OF MARLOWE'S. By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY, Author of 'The Maternity of Harriott Wicken,' 'Folly Corner,' &c. [Second Edition.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—'Vividly told. . . . Rise to heights of excellence. A volume like this is always welcome.'

A TRAITOR IN LONDON. By FERGUS HUME, Author of 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab' &c. [Second Edition.

BRITISH WEEKLY.—'Shows us the writer at his best. We are amazed at his wonderful fluency, his ingenious method of weaving mysteries, which, combined with a real power of telling a tale, place him in the first rank of detective story writers. The book is remarkably clever.'

THE LUCK OF A LOWLAND LADDIE. By MAY CROMMELIN, Author of 'Kinsah,' 'Bettina,' &c. [Second Edition.

GENTLEWOMAN.—'Decidedly one of the brightest and most interesting of Miss Crommelin's always entertaining books.'

YOLANDE THE PARISIENNE. By LUCAS CLEEVE, Author of 'Lazarus,' 'The Monks of the Holy Tear,' &c. [Second Edition.

I'D CROWNS RESIGN. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN, Author of 'Pursued by the Law' &c. [Second Edition.

MORNING POST.—'An unusually vivacious story. The charm of the story lies chiefly in its spirited treatment: the character sketches are very telling. Meg is a charming heroine, with plenty of individuality. Her younger sister is a sprightly minx.'

THE WAY OUT. By G. B. BURGIN, Author of 'The Bread of Tears' &c. [Second Edition.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—'Mr. G. B. Burgin has never written a more engrossing novel. Mr. Burgin's characterisation is excellent, his men and women are living creatures, and he can handle a dramatic scene with skill.'

STRAIGHT SHOES. By G. G. CHATTERTON, Author of 'The Sport of Circumstance,' 'The Angel of Chance,' &c.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—'The story is natural and lifelike, and Miss Chatterton's gift of vivacity and freshness of outlook is still with her. A capital novel, and we cordially recommend it to those readers who like a book which tells of real live people and their ways and words.'

PRESENTATION EDITION. Cloth, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. each volume.

'Stories like these fill a distinct want in the present day. Their whole tone and teaching are earnestly Protestant. They are, besides, written with a vigour and vividness of description which at once excite attention, and their historical accuracy is a distinctive feature, giving a good idea of the life of early and mediæval times. Many of the stories treat of events in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, perhaps the most interesting period in the history of England, and certainly one of the most important in connection with the Reformed Church. They abound in thrilling adventures and hairbreadth escapes, and should be equally popular amongst boys and girls. The tone is a healthy as well as a religious one, and many parents to whom it is becoming an increasing difficulty to find books conveying religious teaching they can rely on will find what they want in any one of Miss Holt's volumes of most interesting stories.'
THE LADIES' LEAGUE GAZETTE.

NEW EDITION. CROWN 8vo. SIX SHILLINGS.

The Romance of Christian Work and Experience.

By Rev. W. HAY M. H. AITKEN, M.A., Canon of Norwich. With Photogravure Portrait of Author.

'The collection of stories is a remarkably large one. They are told with vigour and occasionally with humour; and they give plenty of material for the student of human nature.'—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

'This is an extraordinary title, but as the book is a Romance of Christian Work and Experience, we cannot find fault with it. Mr. Aitken presents his readers with something that many teachers will value; but his book is something very different from a mere indexed repertory of anecdotes designed to be dipped into for a teacher's emergencies.'—CHURCHMAN.

Ambidextrous and Free-Arm Blackboard Drawing and Design

BY F. F. LYDON.

THIS Work, in addition to a fully-illustrated description of the forty eight graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in Free-Arm Drawing and Design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the class-room for the study of this subject. The letterpress shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school, and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing-lesson. The forty-eight exercises, which begin with the simplest curves and work up to examples of floral design, are also issued as four packets of drawing cards suitable for class teaching. All the copies, as befits the subject, are effectively reproduced white on a black background to represent actual blackboard drawing.

Author of 'Foods for the Fat,' 'The Dietetics of Obesity,' 'Aids to Long Life,' &c.

Some Press Opinions on the Work.

'Those who desire a long and healthy life will perhaps find their best means of attaining it in the study and observance of such rules as are laid down here. . . . The book is a rational and practical guide to "Health and Condition."'—MORNING POST.

'Full of valuable hints and suggestive warnings as to the results of improper food and insufficient exercise.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Books like this ought to be very useful.'—GLOBE.

'We hope our readers will note our remarks and consult the valuable book that suggests them.'—QUEEN.

'The author brings a very wide, if not the widest, of all experiences to bear upon his subject, and he treats it most lucidly.'—SPORTSMAN.

'"Of the making of books there is no end," but if the books are of the instructive nature of this work we can never have too many of them.'

'This brief book is written with arch-vivacity, and is not only readable but racy.'—SPEAKER.

'Distinctly diverting is this modest narrative, and it may be recommended heartily to lovers of light reading.'—GLOBE.

Cithara Mea

Poems. By the Rev. P. A. SHEEHAN, P.P., Author of 'My New Curate,' &c. 16mo. cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

All who have been charmed by the poetic spirit of the author's works of fiction, will not fail to welcome this book of verse from the same graceful pen.

A NEW NOVEL BY A POPULAR WRITER.

Weighed in the Balance

By CHRISTIAN REID, Author of 'Armine,' 'Carmela,' 'A Woman of Fortune,' 'The Land of the Sun,' &c. 12mo. cloth, illustrated. 6s.

A fascinating, dramatic story of the human soul. The heroine is a young girl reared with the loftiest ideals, who finds, when brought into contact with the world, that its motives and standards are in direct contradiction to her own. The development of her character under the influence of love, sorrow, and disappointment forms the basis of a most interesting psychological study. Glimpses of the better side of life in Bohemian Paris and of American society lend colour to the narrative.

The Secret of Fougereuse

A Romance of the Fifteenth Century. From the French by LOUISE IMOGENE GUINEY, with Illustrations by CHAS. EMERSON and LOUIS MEYNELL. 12mo. cloth, ornamental, 5s. net, post 4d.

'It is a fine piece of work . . . vivid in its rendering of the conditions and the spirit of the time, full of movement and incident, impressive in its contrasts of noble and Christian character with that of the base intriguer, and withal thoroughly entertaining from first to last.'
CONGREGATIONALIST.

Was Savonarola Really Excommunicated?

An Inquiry. By the Rev. J. L. O'NEIL, O.P., Author of 'Jerome Savonarola—A Sketch.' 12mo. 193 pages, cloth, net 3s.

'The value of the book consists in the fact that it presents fairly the whole matter, so that those interested in it can trace the story within defined lines of truth, and with accuracy.'—PHILADELPHIA TIMES.

ADVANTAGES TO ADVERTISERS

THIS Paper is specially patronised by the Queen and the Royal Family. It is taken at all Foreign Courts and Embassies; by the Nobility and Families of Wealth and Social Position; by all Regiments at Home and Abroad; at the Clubs and Principal Hotels in the Kingdom. It gives the most complete Reports of all Court Ceremonies; of all Balls, Parties, and Festivities in London and the Country; and has the most perfect accounts of all Fashionable Marriages, and announces all the Approaching Marriages. Therefore it is of the greatest advantage to Advertisers in general, and especially so to all who desire to address the Wealthy Classes and those of Social Position. It holds in this respect a unique position. The paper is taken by all Families of Social Distinction in the United Kingdom, and lies on the table during the week, and is thus seen by all. It is likewise largely read on account of the varied Topical and Military News it gives, and special information concerning Foreign Courts.

'Modestly described as a sketch. But though only a sketch, a very graphic one, giving us an admirable idea of the great master of Art criticism and English prose, from the inside. Everywhere it breathes the warm sympathy that alone can interpret any man's life and ideals. The writer keeps a sane and sound judgment, he does not worship his hero; but, all the more, he commands our respect as he attempts to depict him, and expound his teachings. We have much enjoyed every page of the sketch. . . . It deserves to run into many editions.'—SWORD AND TROWEL.

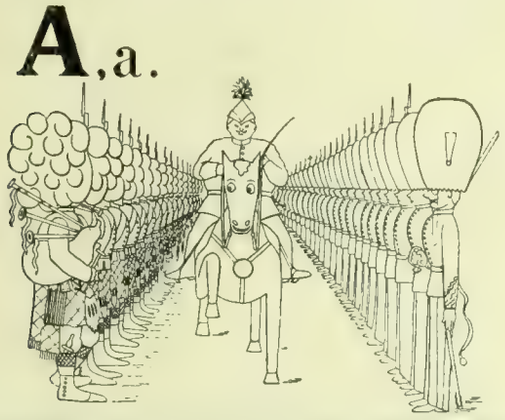
A B C for Baby Patriots.

By Mrs. ERNEST AMES. This Alphabet is composed of amusing topical verses, ably illustrated by full-page Coloured Plates. These are as vivid in their colouring as they are most humorous in conception. The drawings are exceptionally clever and the verses exceedingly smart.



A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

A is the Army
That dies for the Queen;
It's the very best Army
That ever was seen.

The Pickletons.

Told and Drawn by INGLES RHODE. This exceedingly clever and amusingly-illustrated Story consists of twenty-four pages of Coloured Illustrations, which are masterpieces of Mr. INGLES RHODE'S art and humour.

Ten Little Boer Boys.

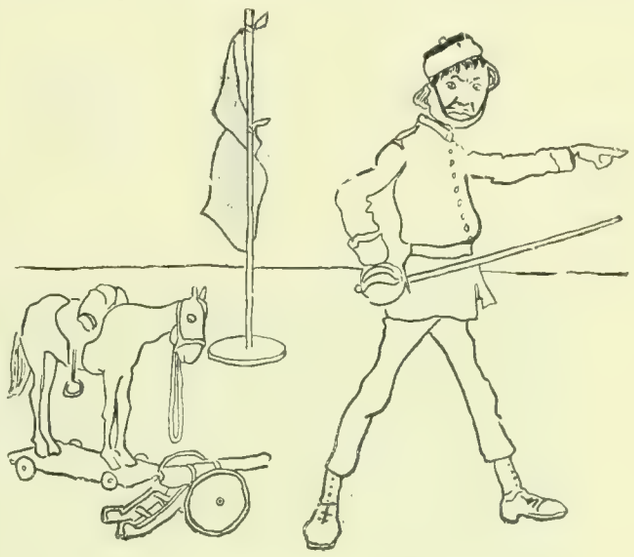
A new version of an old tale. One of the smartest and most original Children's Books ever published. The verses are by 'NORMAN,' and are most cleverly and ably illustrated by exceedingly humorous sketches by A. S. FORREST. There is also music to each verse.

Seven little Boer boys,
Full of naughty tricks,
One abused the white flag
And then there were six.

Pictures for Little Englanders:

A Companion Book to Mrs. Ames' 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

Verses by FRANK GREEN, and Pictures by A. S. FORREST. This book consists of amusing topical verses illustrated in a style which is Mr. FORREST'S own. It makes a splendid companion book to 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'



A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'Pictures for Little Englanders.'

THE VOLUNTEERS.

I am ready, aye ready,
Let foemen advance;
I can easily vanquish
Six soldiers from France.

The Gimcrack Jingle Alphabet.

Drawn by INGLES RHODE, Author and Artist of 'The Pickletons.' Eminent art critics are of opinion that the Drawings in this book surpass even those of 'The Pickletons.'

THE SOUL OF THE COUNTESS, and other Stories. By JESSIE L. WESTON. Author of 'Legends of the Wagner Drama' &c. Printed at the Constable Press on laid paper. With Photogravure Frontispiece by CAROLINE WATTS. Crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

Contents:—The Soul of the Countess; The Sorrow of the King; Our Lady of the Forest; The Unknown Master; The Last Valkyr; The Archbishop that was a Saint.

A WOMAN TENDERFOOT. By GRACE GALLATIN SETON-THOMPSON. Square crown 8vo. 360 pp. 7 Full-page Plates, and upwards of 100 Illustrations, art linen, top gilt, edges trimmed, 6*s.* net.

 Mrs. Thompson, wife of Ernest Seton-Thompson, the Author of 'Wild Animals I have Known,' here describes her adventurous excursions in company with her husband in the wildest districts of North America. The work may best be described in the Author's own words:—

'It is three years since I first became a woman . . . who goes . . . hunting with her husband. I have lived on jerked beef and alkali water. . . . I have been sung asleep a hundred times by the coyote's evening lullaby. . . . I have been nearly frozen eleven thousand feet in air in blinding snow; I have walked on the Dakota plains with the thermometer at 115 degrees; and I have met characters as diverse as the climate. I know what it is to be a miner and a cowboy, but, best of all, I have felt the charm of glorious freedom . . . the joy of the living and of the doing, of the mountain and of the plain.'

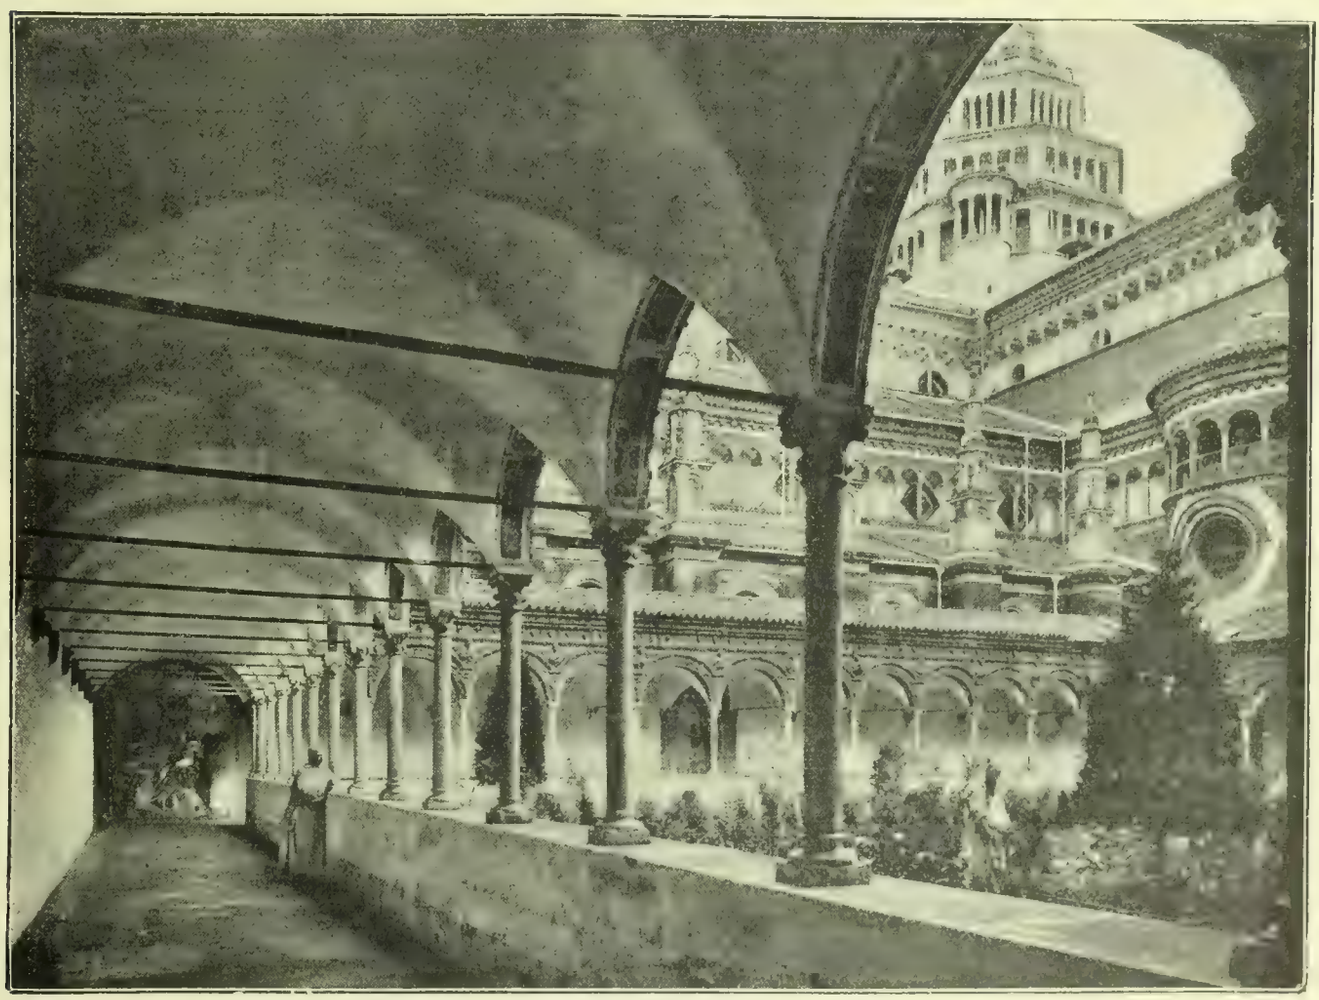
THE CATHEDRAL BUILDERS

THE STORY OF A GREAT GUILD

By LEADER SCOTT

Hon. Mem. Accademia delle Belle Arti, Florence; Author of 'The Renaissance of Art in Italy,' 'Tuscan Studies,' 'Echoes of Old Florence,' 'Handbook of Sculpture,' &c.

Also a SPECIAL EDITION, limited to One Hundred Copies, crown 4to. printed on Imperial Hand-made Paper, the Illustrations printed on Japanese Paper. Price THREE GUINEAS net.



SMALL CLOISTER OF THE CERTOSA OF PAVIA

'Is a very valuable contribution to the origins or modern European architecture.'—SPECTATOR.

'It is impossible to follow the author's learned and beautifully illustrated descriptions of the noble buildings which the world owes to the "Magistri Comacini," or to their influence, without sharing his wonder that art historians have hitherto made so little of the guild which preserved the highest traditions of one of the greatest of the arts for seven centuries. The injustice of this neglect is impressively demonstrated in a work which makes an irresistible appeal to all interested in the history and the triumphs of architecture.'—WORLD.

'I can imagine nothing more delightful than spending from October to June in Italy with the "Cathedral Builders." Italy abounds in the masterpieces the Middle Ages; and in company with these interpreters every symbol, every detail, would have a fresh significance.'—QUEEN.

'Will be perused with eagerness and advantage by all lovers of art in general, and of ecclesiastical art in particular.'—GLOBE.

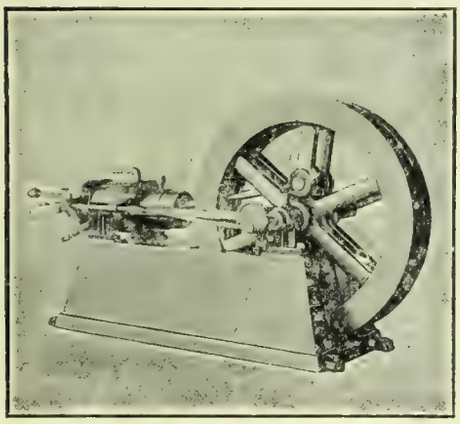
Gas Engine Construction

A PRACTICAL TREATISE DESCRIBING IN EVERY DETAIL THE ACTUAL BUILDING OF A GAS ENGINE.



By HENRY V. A. PARSELL, Jr., Member A. I. Electrical Engineers,

AND

ARTHUR J. WEED, Mechanical Engineer.

Large 8vo. Very Fully Illustrated. Nearly 300 Pages. Handsomely Bound in Cloth.

Price - 14s. net

PREPAID TO ANY ADDRESS.

This books treats of the subject more from the standpoint of practice than that of theory. The principles of operation of Gas Engines are clearly and simply described, and then the actual construction of a half-horse power engine is taken up, step by step, showing in detail the making of a Gas Engine.

First come directions for making the patterns; this is followed by all the details of the mechanical operations of finishing up and fitting the castings. This is profusely illustrated with beautiful engravings of the actual work in progress, showing the modes of chucking, turning, boring and finishing the parts in the lathe, and also plainly showing the lining up and erection of the engine.

Dimensioned working drawings give clearly the sizes and forms of the various details.

The entire Engine, with the exception of the fly-wheels, is designed to be made on a simple eight-inch lathe, with slide rests.

The book closes with a chapter on American practice in Gas Engine design, and gives simple rules so that anyone can figure out the dimensions of similar engines of other powers.

☞ Every Illustration in this book is new and original, having been made expressly for this work.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE FOR AUTOMOBILISTS, MANUFACTURERS, CAPITALISTS, INVESTORS, PROMOTERS, AND EVERYONE INTERESTED IN THE DEVELOPMENT, CARE, AND USE OF THE AUTOMOBILE.

This work is written on a broad basis, and comprises in its scope a full description with illustrations, and details, of the progress and manufacturing advance of one of the most important innovations of the times, contributing to the pleasure and business convenience of mankind.

The make-up and management of Automobile Vehicles of all kinds are very liberally treated, and in a way that will be appreciated by those who are reaching out for a better knowledge of this new era in locomotion.

This book is up to date, and very fully illustrated with various types of Horseless Carriages, Automobiles, and Motor Cycles, with many details of the same.

It also contains a complete list of the Automobile and Motor Manufacturers with their addresses, as well as a list of patents issued since 1856 on the Automobile industry.

TO BE COMPULSORY
JANUARY 1, 1902.

Important Notice to Shipowners, Masters, and Yachtsmen.

THE

International Code

of Signals

Published under the authority of the Board of Trade.

Price One Guinea.

THE Code has been thoroughly revised in every particular, and will entirely supersede the Code which has been in use during the past 40 years.

Eight additional Flags are introduced and the number of Signals is enormously increased.

Coloured Plates are included, illustrating the various British flags, the National colours worn by Men-of-War and Merchant Vessels of all the Chief Maritime Powers of the World, and the Quarantine and other flags required to be displayed.

The book is of demy 4to. size (11 inches by $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches) with 570 pages, and it has a crenellated Index, opening from the centre pages, thus considerably adding to the convenience of reference.

As it will be necessary for every seagoing vessel to use these signals when communicating with other vessels or the shore, it is obvious that the volume should be on board ship and in the hands of navigating officers and signalmen at the earliest possible moment.

Edited by WALTER WELLSMAN, F.R.S.L.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY OF THE BOOK:

ATHENÆUM ... ... 'A valuable publication that needs no praise of ours.'
BRISTOL DAILY POST ... ... 'The best guide to the newspaper press of the English-speaking world.'
BRITISH & COLONIAL PRINTER 'One may always rely on the information one gleans therefrom, certainly a most important feature.'
CITY PRESS ... ... 'Amongst the several guides to the press that are issued annually there is none whose reputation is higher than the Newspaper Press Directory.'
DAILY MAIL ... ... 'As a handy and reliable guide the latest volume maintains the reputation which Mitchell's Directory has always borne.'
DAILY TELEGRAPH ... ... 'In the latest volume received is to be found the same evidence of care in compilation that characterised the previous editions.'
EVENING NEWS ... ... 'It is well got-up, and for clearness of print and easiness of reference cannot be beaten.'
FINANCIAL NEWS ... ... 'Its system of arrangement is admirable, permitting, instant reference to any periodical. The Directory is surprising value for a two-shilling piece.'
GUARDIAN ... ... '1899 is all that one expects it to be, and that in the case of a work which enjoys so high a reputation is to say the best for it that can be said.'
LIVERPOOL COURIER ... ... 'In the 1899 edition of this invaluable annual is collected a great amount of judiciously arranged up-to-date dependable information.'
NEWCASTLE JOURNAL ... ... 'The standard book of reference with respect to the Newspaper Press.'
NORTHERN ECHO ... ... 'A work of the utmost value to advertisers, journalists, and all engaged in literary work.'
PRINTER'S REGISTER ... 'The result is as near perfection as one may hope to attain.'
ST. JAMES' GAZETTE ... ... 'The Directory fully justifies its claim to be considered the standard book of reference for all matters connected with the press.'
YORKSHIRE POST ... 'A thoroughly reliable guide.'

Scribner's Magazine, Christmas 1900 Number

In this number of Scribner's Magazine its readers will find a remarkable collection of Eight Short Stories, attractively illustrated, some beautiful examples of Colour Printing, and a number of Articles of special interest and value.

PICHOU. By HENRY VAN DYKE. A Story of the great Hudson Bay Wilderness, describing the adventurous life of a dog who managed to live down a bad name and win a high place in the community. It is illustrated by Charles S. Chapman.

JOHNNY BEAR. By ERNEST SETON THOMPSON. Tells of one of the bears that enjoy the Government's hospitality in Yellowstone Park, and incidentally afford much amusement and occasionally excitement to the visitors there. Fully illustrated by the Author.

THE CRANE. By FRANCIS CHURCHILL WILLIAMS, is a story of a steel giant that did the heavy lifting at the Sampson Steel Works and of what befell its master. Illustrated by CLIFFORD CARLETON.

THE EMIGRANT EAST. By ARTHUR COLTON, is a story of delicate sentiment and romance, the scene of which is a dusty old book-shop kept by a former Professor of Arabic and Greek, with his pretty daughter as assistant. The illustrations are by JESSIE WILLCOX SMITH.

THE LION'S MOUTH. By HENRY W. and ALICE DUER MILLER, is an amusing bit of social comedy based upon the faculty a certain type of women has for getting others into trouble. The illustrations are by H. C. CHRISTY.

AN UNTOLD STORY. By THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH. A delightful little Sketch. Illustrated by JULES GURAIN.

THE VICE-CONSORT. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, is one of the best and most original of the author's whimsical conceptions, full of drollery and human nature. It is illustrated by A. J. KELLER.

THE WOMEN WHO UNDERSTOOD. By OCTAVE THANET. Tells of the fine friendship of two women, developed from a chance meeting. It is illustrated by HENRY HUTT.

OTHER CONTENTS. W. C. BROWNELL contributes a critical and illuminative Paper on George Eliot and her Work, and there are Poems, 'The Point of View,' and 'The Field of Art.'

An article on the art of Puvis de Chavannes, by the distinguished painter and art critic, Mr. JOHN LA FARGE, is a prominent feature of the number. It is illustrated with remarkable reproductions in colours of several of the most celebrated of the works of Puvis—altogether one of the most beautiful and successful schemes of colour illustration ever attempted in a magazine.

The illustration for the cover of the Christmas number is by MAXFIELD PARRISH. This will be printed in nine colours, and will be accepted as the finest production which this able artist has given us in a field in which he stands almost alone.

The frontispiece, by JESSIE WILLCOX SMITH, printed in colours, illustrates a short poem, by BERTHA GRENEAUX WOODS, entitled 'The Child.'

MONTHLY, ONE SHILLING. Annual Subscription, 15s., post-free.

Scribner's Magazine for 1901

THE REGULAR ARMY. By Gen. FRANCIS V. GREENE. The story of the deeds and achievements of the American Army during the hundred years of its existence. The story will be covered in about six articles, and it will be richly illustrated by F. C. YOHN, H. C. CHRISTY, and others especially fitted for the work.

MRS. GILBERT'S STAGE REMINISCENCES. The articles are among the most vivacious and interesting of their kind, and will contain a wealth of illustrations.

WALTER A. WYCKOFF, Author of 'The Workers,' will have several new articles in the same field.

RUSSIA OF TO-DAY. By HENRY NORMAN. This notable and timely series of articles, begun in October, will be continued, with many illustrations from the Author's photographs and other sources.

EVENTS IN CHINA AND THE EAST will be covered in articles by special correspondents.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT will, from time to time during [illegible] contribute to Scribner's articles on public topics.

THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINEER. By JOHN FOX, JR. Mr. FOX knows his subject by experience and special observation, and illustrates his articles from photographs.

NEW YORK LIFE AND SCENES: the studies of New York which have proved so attractive in Scribner's are to be resumed at intervals during the year.

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN'S charming new story, 'The Diary of a Goose Girl,' will appear in three parts, with very attractive illustrations.

J. M. BARRIE'S NEW STORY. The Magazine will later in the year make an important announcement concerning a new story by J. M. BARRIE.

NEW STORIES OF THE AMATEUR CRACKSMAN. A new series of Cracksman stories by E. W. HORNUNG, of baffling ingenuity in plot and thrilling interest. The stories will be illustrated.

SHORTER FICTION. ERNEST SETON THOMPSON will contribute several of his charming animal stories, illustrated by himself; there will also be short stories by THOMAS NELSON PAGE, OCTAVE THANET, FRANK R. STOCKTON, HENRY JAMES, T. B. ALDRICH, F. J. STIMSON, HENRY VAN DYKE, A. T. QUILLER COUCH, and other well-known writers.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS will contribute several articles and stories.

NOTABLE ART FEATURES will appear from time to time. A list of the illustrators [illegible] includes WALTER APPLETON CLARK, F. C. YOHN, H. C. CHRISTY, MAXFIELD PARRISH, HENRY MCCARTER, A. I. KELLER, A. B. FROST, E. C. PEIXOTTO, W. GLACKENS, HENRY HUTT, and many others. There will be new and original schemes of illustration in colours, as well as in black and white [illegible] covers.

A RARE WORK OF ART

RELIGION, HISTORY, ART

COMBINED HAVE MADE

Tissot's Life of Christ

THE FINEST ART WORK OF THE CENTURY.

WE cannot possibly do full justice in words to the beauty of the illustrations in THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, by J. J. TISSOT. They must be seen to comprehend it. The whole printing of the work is of the highest possible order; in fact, unique even in these days of exquisite press work. A sample page—exact size and actual paper—will be sent on application, which will afford subscribers an idea of the beauty of these peerless artistic reproductions, and also furnishes an opportunity to examine the perfection of the text printing. It is no boast to say that the world can produce nothing finer or more worthy of the sacred story.

To convey an idea of the wealth of illustrations poured into this work we must resort to figures. The illustrations number:

36 Facsimile Full-page Reproductions in Colour.
2 Title Pages with Coloured Illustration.
101 Coloured Illustrations in the Text.
138 Illustrations in Text printed in Various Tints.
99 Illustrations in Text printed in Black.
160 Explanatory Illustrations. Facsimile of Wood Engravings after Drawings.
6 Plans.

Initial Letters, Borders, Head and Tail Pieces, all designed by the Author, appear on nearly every page.

For lovers of beautiful books, the publishers have therefore provided in the the PEOPLE'S EDITION of the LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, by J. J. TISSOT, the greatest opportunity of the century.

A few expressions of approval taken from many hundreds are as follows:

'The work is of rare excellence. It is scarcely possible for colour-printing to go further.'—STANDARD.

'The designs are faintly praised when we speak of them in the highest terms. The reproductions are successful beyond expectations, whether as regards their spirit, veracity or completeness, or, when the colouring of the originals is concerned,

'A book of great beauty . . . a valuable possession.'—CHURCH TIMES.

THE FOURTH EDITION OF

JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND New Questions, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES.

Foolscap 8vo. Cloth, 460 pp. Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE, July 1899.

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.

'ISABELLA MULVANY, B.A.,
Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.'

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity.

'No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.

'DAVID ROSS, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D.,
'Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.'

'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'—H.M. INSPECTOR.

'Of Arithmetics there is no end, but for this particular one we are inclined to anticipate an unending use. We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.'
EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

'Specially serviceable for those preparing for Civil Service and other examinations.'—CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.

'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—MORNING POST.

THE SHORTHAND OF ARITHMETIC

AN INVALUABLE COMPANION TO ALL ARITHMETICS

FOR TEACHERS, STUDENTS, MIDDLE AND UPPER FORMS.

Price 1s. 6d.

With upwards of 1,700 Questions and two valuable Appendices on 'Incrementation' and 'How to Teach Arithmetic.'

'A book decidedly worthy of the attention of teachers.'—GLASGOW HERALD.
'A little manual which will not only be invaluable in the school and class-room, but also in the larger domain of business life.'—LEEDS MERCURY.
'The short and ready methods employed are obviously better than the usual routine.'—BOOKSELLER.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, London, E.C.

THE CHISWICK PRESS, 1790-1900

"THE CHIEF HONOURS OF BOOK PRODUCTION IN LONDON DURING THE PRESENT CENTURY HAVE BEEN RIGHTLY AWARDED TO THE CHISWICK PRESS.

Charles Whittingham, the elder, was born at Calledon, near Coventry, in 1767, and was apprenticed to a printer of that city. As soon as his time was out he came to London, and set up a press in Fetter Lane, his chief customers being Willis, a bookseller of Stationers' Court, Jordan of Fleet Street, and Symonds of Paternoster Row. . . His first important publisher was a certain Heptinstall, who set him to print new editions of Boswell's 'Johnson,' Robertson's 'America,' and other important works. This was enough to set him going, and in 1797 he moved to larger premises in Dean Street, Fetter Lane, and then began to issue illustrated books. In 1803 he took a second workshop at 10 Union Buildings, Leather Lane, and again in 1807 he moved to Goswell Street. In 1811 he took his foreman Robert Rowland into partnership, and shortly afterwards left him to manage the city business, while he himself set up a press at Chiswick and took up his abode at College House. Here he continued to work until his death in 1840. For a short time, from 1824 to 1828, he was joined with his nephew Charles, to whom at his death he left the Chiswick business. There is not much to be said of the work of the elder Whittingham. He confined his attention to the issue of small books, such as the 'British Classics,' which he began to print in 1803. His books are chiefly notable for the printing of the woodcuts, which, by the process known as overlaying, he brought to great perfection. . . Charles Whittingham the younger was a genuine artist in printing. He loved books to begin with, and thought no pains too great to bestow upon their production. Born at Mitcham, on October 30th, 1795, he was apprenticed to his uncle in 1810. In 1824 he was taken into partnership, but this lasted only four years, and he then set up for himself at 21 Tooks Court, Chancery Lane. A near neighbour of his at that time was the publisher William Pickering, who since 1820 had been putting in the hands of the public some excellently printed and dainty volumes. . . The meeting between the two men had been brought about by Basil Montagu in the summer of 1829. They found themselves kindred spirits on the subject of the artistic treatment of books, and a friendship sprang up between them, that ceased only with Pickering's death in 1854, and was productive of some of the most beautiful books that had ever come from an English press. Mr. Arthur Warren, in his book, 'The Charles Whittinghams, Printers' (p. 203), tells us: 'The two men met frequently for consultation, and whenever the bookseller visited the press, which he often did, there were brave experiments toward. The printer would produce something new in title-pages, or in colour work, or ornament, and the bookseller would propound some new venture in the reproduction of an ancient volume.' In the artistic production of books they were ably assisted by Whittingham's eldest daughter Charlotte, and Mary Byfield. . . In 1844 Pickering and Whittingham were in consultation as to the production of an edition of 'Juvenal' to be printed in old-face great primer, and the foundry of the latest descendant of the Caslons was ransacked to supply the fount. The edition was to be rubricated and otherwise decorated, and this, or the printer's stock trouble, 'lack of paper,' occasioning some delay, the revived type first appeared in a fiction entitled 'Lady Willoughby's Diary.'"

From Plomer's "A Short History of English Printing, 1476-1898" published by Messrs. Kegan Paul Trench Trubner and Co. Ltd. 1900.
